ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to thank all those involved in Neapolitan cinema who took time out to meet with me and discuss their work: Antonio Capuano, Antonietta De Lillo, Vincenzo Di Marino (Artimagiche), Giogiò Franchini, Roberto Gambacorta, Nicola Giuliano (Indigo Film), Stefano Incerti, Giorgio Magliulo, Pasquale Marrazzo, Enzo Moscato, Rino Piccolo (former President of the Campania Film Commission) and Romolo Sticchi. Thanks also go to Antonietta De Lillo and Giogiò Franchini for allowing me to visit the post-production of Il resto di niente and to Mario Martone and Giorgio Magliulo for allowing me on to the set of L'odore del sangue.

For their help in obtaining commercially unavailable films I would like to thank Artimagiche, A.S.P., Antonietta De Lillo, Giogiò Franchini, Julian Grainger, Stefano Incerti, Kubla Khan, Pasquale Marrazzo, Vincenzo Terracciano, Christopher Wagstaff and Mary Wood. I would also like to acknowledge the assistance and advice in a variety of capacities of Francesco Napolitano and Francesco Tartaglia of the Mediateca Santa Sofia in Naples, Sean Delaney and the staff of the BFI National Library, Teatri Uniti, Paola Accampa of the Premio Massimo Troisi, Daniela La Penna (University of Reading), Pasquale Iaccio (Università degli Studi di Napoli Federico II), Dario Minutolo (Associazione Italiana per le Ricerche di Storia del Cinema), Richard Dyer (King's College London), Sergio Angelini, Sergio Rigoletto and Alberto Castellano. Thanks for assistance with the maps go to Emma Butler and for their hospitality in Naples to Claire Jenkins and Giorgio D'Agostino.

This book is based on a PhD thesis conducted with a grant from the Arts and Humanities Research Council, to whom I would like to express my gratitude. Thanks also to my colleagues at the University of Reading Italian department and above all to my supervisor, Christopher Wagstaff, for his encouragement and ever-insightful comments. A final word of thanks to my parents for their support – both moral and financial – throughout this project.
