The writing of any book is a long and sometimes arduous process in which the encouragement and assistance of many come to bear. A volume of this kind, which covers a large swathe of history, can only ever be the product of research, reading and conversations that have accumulated over many years. I am grateful to the numerous scholars, young and old, with whom I have had the pleasure of interacting during that time, and the many students who have discussed the Berber dynasties with me, and obliged me to provide a coherent narrative of this complex era. Particular thanks are due to Michael Brett for his ongoing support and interest in my work; to Maribel Fierro for her always stimulating, challenging and erudite perspectives on the Almohads; to Camilo Gómez-Rivas, Allen J. Fromherz and Mariam Rosser-Owen, younger scholars who have opened fresh vistas on the Almoravids and Almohads, respectively; and to Shady Hekmat Nasser who read and commented on the draft and provided numerous edifying snippets of information on religious scholars and many other topics.

I am also grateful to the Leverhulme Trust for a two-year research grant to explore political legitimacy in the Maghrib assisted by a post-doctoral fellow, James A. O. C. Brown, and to the Department of Middle Eastern Studies, University of Cambridge, and Magdalene College for granting me a year's sabbatical from teaching and administrative duties to complete the writing of this book. Thanks are also due to Professor Ian Netton with whom I first discussed the idea of adding a volume on the western Islamic dynasties to the Edinburgh series, and to the editorial staff at Edinburgh University Press, particularly Nicola Ramsey and Ellie Bush, who have been unfailingly courteous, despite the time it has taken me to fulfil my side of the bargain. I should also like to thank Dr Adrian Popescu and the Fitzwilliam Museum for supplying and allowing the reproduction of images from the coin collections, and Mariam Rosser-Owen for kindly sharing her photographs of Tinmall with me.

I am painfully aware that a whirlwind tour through two hundred years of history naturally leads to a process of selectivity, with which not everyone will agree, and many unacknowledged intellectual debts, all such errors and lacunae are my own responsibility and I hope that readers may forgive me for them.
