

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Many people have helped us in the preparation of this book. We are greatly indebted to the Wellcome Trust whose financial support underpinned the project from 2001 to 2006. In addition, the award by the Leverhulme Trust of an Emeritus Fellowship to Professor Roger Davidson in 2007 greatly facilitated additional research for section IV of the study, and the completion of the manuscript.

In our quest to explore the sexual concerns and ideologies of the Scottish policy community we have also received invaluable support from many archivists and librarians. In particular, we would wish to thank the staff of the British Medical Association Archives, Church of Scotland Archives, Edinburgh Central Library, Edinburgh City Archives, Edinburgh University Centre for Research Collections, Glasgow City Archives, Lothian Health Services Archive, National Archives of Scotland (now National Records of Scotland), NHS Greater Glasgow and Clyde Archives, National Library of Scotland, New College Library, Northern Health Services Archives, The National Archives (Public Record Office, Kew) and the Wellcome Library for the History and Understanding of Medicine. Thanks are also due to the Keeper of Public Records and the Keeper of the Records of Scotland for permission to quote from central government archives. In addition, we are indebted to Dr Sandy McMillan and the late Dr Alastair Batchelor for access to the papers of the Medical Society for the Study of Venereal Diseases, Scottish Branch, and of Dr R. C. L. Batchelor, respectively. Finally, the chapters relating to abortion, family planning and sexual health drew upon valuable oral testimony and we wish to thank those members of the medical community who very kindly agreed to be interviewed for the purposes of our study.

We have benefited enormously from the shared expertise of many historians and social scientists, in particular Lynn Abrams, Michael Anderson, Mike Barfoot, Angela Bartie, Allan Beveridge, Esther Breitenbach, Anne Crowther, Brian Dempsey, Kirsten Elliott, Trevor Griffiths, Lesley Hall, Louise Jackson, Bob Morris, Graeme Morton, Malcolm Nicolson, Lutz Sauerteig, Steve Sturdy and Simon Taylor. We have also enjoyed a very supportive departmental environment. In particular, we are beholden to Stana Nenadic and Martin Chick who, as heads of the then Department of Economic and Social History, gave us every encouragement and selflessly protected our research agenda against the encroachment of other duties. In addition, we wish to thank Dr Helen Coyle for her work on the content of Scottish newspapers in 1950 and 1980 that furnished the basis of an introductory overview of shifting moral perspectives within Scottish society. Above all, we have to thank our respective families, who have endured many years during which our preoccupation with the history of sex and sexuality has lowered the tone of many a social occasion.

As the book has evolved over a number of years, parts of the material have been published in earlier versions. Parts of Chapter 2 appeared as “A festering sore on the body of society”: the Wolfenden Committee and female prostitution in mid-twentieth-century Scotland’, Journal of Scottish Historical Studies, 24: 1 (2004), 80–98 (Edinburgh University Press). Chapters 3 and 4 draw on “A field for private members”: the Wolfenden Committee and Scottish homosexual law reform, 1950–67’, Twentieth Century British History, 15: 2 (2004), 174–201 (Oxford University Press) and ‘Sexuality and the state: the campaign for Scottish homosexual law reform, 1967–80’, Contemporary British History, 20: 4 (2006), 533–58 (Taylor and Francis). Some of the material in Chapters 5 and 8 originally appeared as “A fifth freedom” or “hideous atheistic expediency”? The medical community and abortion law reform in Scotland, c. 1960–1975’, Medical History, 50: 1 (2006), 29–48 (Wellcome Trust) and as “This thorniest of problems”: school sex education policy in Scotland 1939–80’, Scottish Historical Review, 84: 2 (2005), 221–46 (Edinburgh University Press). Finally, some of our conclusions were first sketched out in ‘The sexual state: sexuality and Scottish governance, 1950–80’, Journal of the History of Sexuality, 13: 4 (2004), 500–21 (University of Texas Press).
