Acknowledgements

I owe numerous friends and colleagues thanks for indulging me in lengthy conversations about the contents of this book. Amongst colleagues in the School of English, University College Cork, I am especially grateful to Graham Allen, Lee Jenkins, and Barry Monahan for comments, suggestions and encouragement along the way. Rachel MagShamhráin, Silvia Ross and David Ryan also provided helpful comments that fed into Chapters 2, 3 and 4, respectively. Katie Ahern, Conor Dawson, and Dan O'Brien provided invaluable feedback on chapter drafts. Tamás Benyei provided especially insightful comments on some material that eventually found its way into the Introduction and Chapter 2. The School of English administrative staff – Anne Fitzgerald, Jennifer Crowley, Elaine Hurley, and Carol Power – deserve special praise for being always efficient and supportive, as do the patient editorial and publicity staff at Edinburgh University Press.

The College of Arts, Celtic Studies, and Social Sciences, University College Cork provided me with a period of research leave, a contribution towards publications costs, and travel bursaries towards a number of conferences, for all of which I am very grateful. I would also like to thank the organisers of conferences in Chichester, Belfast, Cork, Reykjavik, and Lincoln for the opportunity to deliver papers and receive feedback on early drafts of sections of this book. These conferences also enabled me to meet and exchange ideas with numerous fellow delegates, and I would like to thank, in particular, Clare Hayes-Brady, Adam Kelly, and Philip McGowan for useful general discussions regarding contemporary literature, and Anne Whitehead, Kalí Tal and Susannah Radstone for more theoretical discussions and further recommended readings.

Thanks finally to Mona and Dan Clarke, who were always there when we needed them, and pre-eminently to Bronagh Clarke who not only donated what little spare time she had to give surpassingly helpful feedback on the entire book, but without whose love, support, advice and encouragement this work would not have been possible.

Excerpt from In the Shadow of No Towers by Art Spiegelman, copyright © 2004 by Art Spiegelman. Used by permission of Pantheon Books, an imprint of the Knopf Doubleday Publishing Group, a division of Random House LLC. All rights reserved.

For Bronagh, who made it easier, and to Nathaniel, who made it, joyously, more difficult.