

Acknowledgments

This book was long in the making, so I have a number of people to thank. It is not an exaggeration to say that this book would have been impossible without the help of Amanda Oliver and Bev Brereton at the Archives and Research Collections Centre at Western University. Their talents as archivists allowed me to locate the “needles” of primary material in the “haystack” of the Labatt Collection. Many times, I was not exactly sure what I was looking for, or what might be in the collection. But Ms Oliver and Ms Brereton patiently listened to my ramblings and then went about finding the principal material that undergirds this book. Robin Keirstead, at the Western University archives, was also generous with his time and advice during the research phase of this project. Thank you to Jean Hung at the Archives Research and Collections Centre for putting up with my multiple requests for images, many of them coming toward the end of this project and thus with tight time restrictions. I also thank Sharon McKay, Labatt Breweries of Canada director of public affairs, for supporting this project and for taking an interest in my work and Labatt’s history more generally. And to everyone else at the Western University archives: thank you for creating such a welcoming and friendly environment in which to conduct my research.

I am lucky to work in the history department at Carleton University. It has long been my home away from home. The current chair, Dominique Marshall, like all the chairs before her, has created an environment that is convivial, scholarly, and professional. I thank the former dean of the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences at Carleton University, Wally Clement, for his encouragement and support. Many of my friends and colleagues have allowed me to bounce ideas off them in the course of writing this book. Thank you to Dimitry Anastakis, John Bellamy, Rafael Castro, Craig Heron, Teresa da Silva Lopes, Dan Malleck, Brian McKillop, James Opp, Patricio Sáiz, and Andrew Smith. I particularly want to acknowledge the late Adam Day for his insights. I am sure that wherever he is perched, he is smiling and nodding. My thanks to the editors of Brewery History, the Canadian Historical Review, Histoire Sociale/Social History, and Business History for giving me permission to use some of my previously published material in this book. Once again, it has been a pleasure to work with everyone at McGill-Queen's University Press. I would particularly like to thank Jonathan Crago, Kathleen Fraser, Casey Gazzellone, and Eleanor Gasparik for helping me get this book ready for publication.

I also need to thank my mother, Annette Bellamy, for proofreading every chapter and offering a few suggestions. Finally, I extend my deepest thanks to Dr Duncan McDowall. He, too, read most of this book while it was being written. He constantly remarked on the substance and the tone of this work and made numerous suggestions on how it might be improved. I can never repay the debt that I owe him. His advice has made this book much better. That being said, where mistakes exist, they are solely my responsibility.
