

Acknowledgments

I want to express my gratitude to friends and colleagues who have read various parts of this book and who have offered their invaluable suggestions: David Lattimore, Dore J. Levy, Brian Kern, Deborah Porter, Margaret Wan, and Eric Hutton. I was the recipient of a Faculty Fellow Award from the University Research Committee of the University of Utah. The College of Humanities of the university also granted me a sabbatical leave in the 2004-05 academic year. I would like to thank them for their generous support. The two anonymous readers of SUNY Press offered their helpful comments and suggestions. Jane Kepp's editorial expertise helped me to prepare a polished book. The excellent advice from Diane Ganeles, senior production editor at SUNY Press, has made the production process painless and enjoyable. Finally, I would like to thank Nancy Ellegate, senior acquisition editor at SUNY Press, for her astonishing efficiency—the entire reviewing process took only three months. It has been truly a pleasure to have had the opportunity to work with her again.

The writing of this book coincided with the birth and growth of Adrian, our second child, who is now six years old. Adrian and his brother, Jeremy, helped me to place this project in a fitting place in my life. In doing so, they have taught me an important lesson about life and work in general. My wife, Xiaolian, has never failed to offer me her love, understanding, and appreciation. Without them, this otherwise strictly academic undertaking would never have been so fulfilling.

I must thank Wu Yun and Ji Yu, my parents, and Carl and Margaret Engelhart, my teachers and friends, for whatever I achieve in my life. They provide me with their affection and wisdom that I will always need in trying to lead a meaningful, balanced life in this increasingly uncertain world.
