

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Acknowledgments	ix
Introduction	1
PART ONE
THE CHALLENGE OF FORCE PLANNING FACING FUTURE SURPRISES	19
1 Prediction and Intelligence—The Dominant Approach in Force Planning and Its Failure to Answer the Challenge of Technological and Doctrinal Surprise	21
PART TWO
FLEXIBILITY-BASED RECOVERY—A THEORETICAL VIEW	53
2 Conceptual and Doctrinal Flexibility	55
3 Organizational and Technological Flexibility	73
4 Cognitive and Command and Control (C2) Flexibility	98
5 The Mechanism for Lesson Learning and Rapid Dissemination	111
PART THREE
RECOVERY FROM SURPRISE—A HISTORICAL VIEW	121
6 The German Recovery From the Surprise of British Chaff	123
7 The German Recovery From the Soviet T-34 Tank Surprise	138
8 The Israeli Recovery From the Egyptian Sagger Missile Surprise	150
9 The Israeli Air Force Recovery From the Arab Anti-Aircraft Missile Surprise	164
10 The Slow British Recovery From the German Armor and Anti-Tank Tactics	179

11	The Slow Soviet Recovery From the Surprise of Low-Intensity Conflict in Afghanistan	191
12	The French Failure to Recover From the Surprise of the German Blitzkrieg	205
	Summary and Conclusions	223
	Appendixes to Chapter 1	233
	Notes	249
	Bibliography	301
	Index	321