Acknowledgments

This volume would not have been possible without the generous support of the Japan Foundation Center for Global Partnership, which provided a grant that enabled us to conduct two authors' workshops, one in Palo Alto and one in Tokyo. We also thank the Center for International Security and Cooperation (CISAC) at Stanford University and Hitotsubashi University for hosting those workshops. The feedback provided on draft chapters from both the other authors and independent scholars and practitioners at these workshops greatly improved the final product.

We thank Geoffrey Burn at Stanford University Press for his interest in this subject and support for this project. In addition, we thank the two anonymous reviewers of the manuscript who gave us most detailed and demanding feedback. Addressing the substantive issues they raised required both additional research and considerable revision, but we feel the book is much better because they took their reviewers' responsibilities so seriously.

We thank all of our coauthors for their dedication to this project. Nobumasa Akiyama from Hitotsubashi University deserves special recognition for both helping us identify the best Japanese authors for various chapters in the book and for hosting, with efficiency and grace, the authors' workshop at his university. This book would not have been possible without his assistance.

Finally, we want to thank Reid B.C. Pauly and Anna C. Coll for their superb work at CISAC from the start to the finish of this project. Reid was present at the creation, helping write the grant proposal, organizing the Stanford and Tokyo workshops, and writing reviews for each author. Anna was essential to bringing the book across the finish line: her keen analytic acumen and her stellar editing skills improved every chapter in the book. We deeply appreciate the patience and persistence she displayed in helping us turn a manuscript into a book. We also thank Maral Mirshahi for coordinating the final editing changes and bringing the volume across the finish line.

viii ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Edward D. Blandford Scott D. Sagan