

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

THIS PROJECT HAS BENEFITED FROM THE COMMUNITY OF FACULTY, COLLEAGUES, and other friends that I have enjoyed over the last several years. The initial ideas were developed as a dissertation in the Department of American Studies at the University of Minnesota, where I benefited from the generous criticisms, encouragement, and support of faculty including Elaine Tyler May, Lary May, Carol Miller, David Noble, Riv-Ellen Prell, and Erika Doss (University of Colorado), as well as a network of my fellow graduate students, including Matt Basso, Steve Garabedian, Deirdre Murphy, and Thea Petchler. In the American Civilization Department at Brown University, Robert Lee and Susan Smulyan granted me status as a visiting scholar and much-needed library privileges for my early research on this project.

I have also benefited from the generous assistance of individuals in dozens of far-flung locations who provided important materials and insights: Harvey and Ann Slatin, Stamford, New York; Mary Watson, Ada, Oklahoma; Dean Alvin Turner, East Central State University, Ada, Oklahoma; Charlie at the Osage Certificate Degree of Indian Blood office in Pawhuska, Oklahoma (who searched in vain on more than one occasion for evidence of Yeffe Kimball's Osage ancestry, and explained the requirements of Osage citizenship); Richard Nelson, Duluth, Minnesota; Brandy and Jeremy Young, Glenhead, New York; Hazel Belvo, Minneapolis, Minnesota; Briand Mesaba Morrison, Bemidji, Minnesota; Lloyd Kiva New, Santa Fe, New Mexico; Ronald Kuchta, New York; Byron Harvey, Cambridge, Massachusetts; Joy Harvey, Somerville, Massachusetts; Tom Young, Philbrook Museum of Art, Tulsa, Oklahoma; Mario Klimiades and Jim Reynolds, Heard Museum, Phoenix, Arizona; Steve Eichner, Chrysler Museum, Norfolk, Virginia; Judy Throm and Liza Kirwin, Archives of American Art, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D.C.; Rosemary Ellison, Southern Plains Indian Museum, Indian Arts and Crafts Board, Anadarko, Oklahoma; Walter Big Bee, Institute of American Indian Arts, Santa Fe; John Day and Margaret Quintal, Institute of American Indian Studies, University of South Dakota, Vermillion; Shannon Parker, collections manager, Indian Arts Research Center, School of American Research, Santa Fe; and Valerie Verzuh, collections manager, Museum of Indian Arts and Culture, Museum of New Mexico, Santa Fe.

Valuable commentary and criticism were offered by copresenters, readers, respondents, and audience members at numerous panels at conferences of the Native American Art Studies Association, College Art Association, and American Studies Association, where I presented early versions of many of the chapters and case studies in this book. In particular, I thank Kathleen Ash-Milby, Sara Bates, Bruce Bernstein, Elizabeth Hutchinson, Carolyn Kastner, Nancy Mithlo, Kate Morris, Zena Pearlstone, Jackson Rushing, Hillary Scotthorne, Charlotte Townsend-Gault, Jennifer Vigil, Sam Watson, Mark White, and Adriana Zavala for their insights and criticisms. As I prepared this book, Kim Beck carefully read and commented on every draft.

At the University of Memphis, I enjoyed the support of the Department of Art and of the College of Communication and Fine Arts, where I was supported by a New Faculty Research Initiation Award, Faculty Development Grant, Faculty Development Leave, and travel assistance. In particular, my work was supported and assisted by Brenda Landman, Jed Jackson, Associate Dean Moira Logan, and Dean Richard Ranta. Steve Harvey (now at the University of Chicago) showed exceptional interest and collegiality, and pointed me toward a number of key resources relating to his father, Byron Harvey III.

I was especially fortunate to have been awarded a fellowship and a residence as visiting scholar at the Georgia O’Keeffe Museum Research Center in Santa Fe, which generously provided the time, office space, and intellectual community for the writing of much of the present manuscript. Director Barbara Buhler-Lynes, Librarian Eumie Imm-Stroukoff, and my cohort at the research center—Alan Braddock, Greg Forter, Linda Kim, and Mark White—formed an exciting and collegial group whose shared interests and critical insights benefited this work immeasurably. My year in Santa Fe was also enlivened by a network of new friends and colleagues including Randolph Lewis, Joseph Traugott, and Vickery White. In New York, space for writing was generously provided by Bryson Brodie and Chad MacDermid.

A subvention grant from the Society for the Preservation of American Modernists assisted with the costs of photographs and permissions for the artworks included here. Nancy Scott Jackson at the University Press of Kansas provided encouragement for this book at an early stage. Jackson Rushing and an anonymous reader for Duke University Press helped shape this book into the present form. Janet Berlo offered her enthusiastic support for this project at a crucial moment. I also thank Kirsten Bohl, Justin Faerber, Anitra Grisales, and Ken Wissoker for their enthusiasm, support, and assistance in bringing this project to conclusion.

I also thank my parents, Bill and Nancy Anthes, and my family for their support over the many years that this book has been in the making. And finally, I dedicate this book to Olive for deep, soulful looks and fierce protection and Kim Beck for the same.
