

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments • ix

Introduction • i

PART I The Struggle for Disciplinary Recognition:
Why “Invent” a Discipline in Nineteenth-Century France?

1 The “Invention” of Demography, 1853–1855 • 35

2 The Neglect of Demography, 1855–1867 • 49

3 The Reinvention of Demography, 1867–1878 • 67

PART II The Institutionalization of Vital Statistics in England:
How to “Secure” a Discipline in Nineteenth-Century England

4 The Invention of Vital Statistics, 1830–1837 • 93

5 Vital Statistics as an Instrument of Social Reform • 105

PART III The Institutionalization of Demography in France:
How to “Secure” a Discipline in Nineteenth-Century France

6 Discipline Formation at Last • 135

7 Limits to Institutionalization • 157

PART IV The Struggle to Retain Disciplinary Recognition:
How to “Defend” a Discipline in Nineteenth-Century England

8 The Challenge to Vital Statistics • 179

9 Institutional Transformations and the Introduction of Disciplinary Specialization • 191

Conclusion • 213

Notes • 227

Bibliography • 253

Index • 273

