In the fall of 1989 while a doctoral student at Howard University, I enrolled in a graduate seminar—African American Literary Criticism—directed by Sandra G. Shannon. Little did I know that the subject matter of this seminar would intermittently haunt me over the next five years. At that time no such collection as is offered here existed. While studying the richly diverse history of African American literary criticism from a variety of disparate, sometimes obscure, sources, I realized how necessary and useful such a collection would be to students and scholars of African American and American literature.

As this project has truly been a communal effort, I have incurred many debts. I thank the following members of the Department of English at Howard University who read and gave useful comments on earlier drafts of the introduction: R. Victoria Arana, Theodore R. Hudson, Sandra G. Shannon, and Eleanor W. Traylor. The tracking of copyright permissions allowed me the opportunity to meet new friends and to call upon old friends. I thank Dudley Randall, founder of Broadside Press; E. Ethelbert Miller, Howard University; Ernest Mason, North Carolina Central University, Durham, N.C.; Wilson Flemister, Atlanta University; Cynthia Lewis, Howard University Press; Haki Madhubuti, Third World Press; Anthony Bogucki, Copyright Division, Library of Congress; and all of the permissions editors at the various presses and journals who efficiently answered my requests. I must also say a word of appreciation to the estates of the deceased critics for their cooperation in continuing the work of those departed. I thank Cathy N. Davidson and Michael Moon, both of Duke University, for their gracious encouragement, kind words, and inspiring interest in my work; I also thank Cathy Davidson for her useful suggestions, which greatly enriched the introduction. Additionally, I thank several of my colleagues at the University of North Carolina, Wilmington (with which I was affiliated 1992–93) for their kind words of encouragement: Keith Newlin, JoAnn Seiple, and Richard Veit. Many thanks to Carol Kolmerten, my colleague at Hood College, for her useful suggestions regarding funding. My students at both the University of North Carolina, Wilmington and Hood College deserve a word of gratitude as they have politely listened to numerous anecdotes pertaining to this book and eagerly awaited its publication. For her useful comments on the introduction and the bibliography, as well as for being (once more) “a friend to my mind,” I thank Deborah H. Barnes, of Gettysburg College and a fellow Howard alum. I also thank Duane Cooper, of the University of Maryland—College Park, for his invaluable assistance in compiling the index. I am especially grateful to my editor, Ken Wissoker, who provided me with the best of wise advice and enthusiastic support, and to Duke University Press for its commitment to cultural studies of this sort. I also wish to thank the Danforth Foundation, St. Louis, Mo., for its support while I was a Danforth-Compton fellow at Howard University. I am equally grateful to the National Endowment for the Humanities for a summer stipend which allowed me time to revise.

No words can adequately express my appreciation to my family for their love and encouragement as well as for listening to hours of my ravings (and rantings) about this book. This one is for all of you, especially my uncle, G. Franklin Wiggins; my brother, Steven V. Mitchell; and my sister-friend, Lola Davis. I especially thank my inspiring and courageous mother, Evelyn W. Mitchell, because all that I am that is good I owe to her. Lastly, I must thank Mac for his companionship and his patience.
