Scholarship is a collective endeavor, even in the production of so-called monographs. I have many people to thank for helping me produce this one. This project began at the University of California at San Diego, where Joseph Esherick and Paul Pickowicz provided invaluable guidance and frank criticism from its inception to its current end. Other individuals also offered their support and feedback during this process, especially the editors of the Spatial Habitus series, Ronald Knapp and Xing Ruan, whose critiques helped me to streamline my arguments and whose advice was crucial for the successful completion of the manuscript. Along the way, I have also incurred debts to Delin Lai, Rebecca Nedostup, William Kirby, Richard Madsen, Suzanne Cahill, Takashi Fujitani, Lu Liu, Zvia Lipkin, and Liping Wang, who each read significant portions of my work and offered helpful suggestions for improvement or shared their own works with me.

My research would not have been possible without the material assistance of key institutions. My first foray into the archives of Nanjing occurred while I was affiliated with the Johns Hopkins/Nanjing University Center for Chinese and American Studies and was supported by the Hassenfeld Fellowship. In 1999–2000, the Fulbright Fellowship and the National Endowment for Culture and the Arts (NECA) sponsored my research in Taiwan and China. My stay in Nanjing during early 2000 was also aided by a scholarship from the Ministry of Education of the People's Republic of China, with much logistical support from the American Council of Learned Societies/Committee on Scholarly Communication with China (ACLS/CSCC) program. I am very grateful as well to Cai Shaoqing, Tao Heshan, and Luo Ling at Nanjing University. They provided much needed assistance in navigating the libraries and archives of China. In 2000–2002, the Sun Yat-sen Institute for Social Science Research greatly assisted my continuing work in Taiwan. I am particularly indebted to Professor Liu Shih-chi and Professor Angela Leung for sponsoring my work there.

I would also like to thank the staff at key libraries and archives: the Academia Historica in Xindian, Taiwan; the China Number Two Historical Archives in Nanjing; the Archives of the Historical Commission, Central Committee of the Kuomintang in Taipei; the Nanjing University Library; the Nanjing Municipal Library; the Shanghai Municipal Library; the National Library of China in Beijing; the National Central Library in Taipei; the Library of Academia Sinica; the Harvard-Yenching Library; the Center for Chinese Studies and Asian Language Libraries of the University of California at Berkeley; the Hoover Institution Library and Archives at Stanford; and the Library of Congress.

I would also like to thank the many people at the University of Hawai'i Press and Hong Kong University Press who expertly guided this manuscript through publication. At the former, executive editor Patricia Crosby and managing editor Ann Ludeman were wonderfully astute, patient, and supportive. Freelance editor Lee S. Motteler thoroughly copyedited and improved the manuscript.

Julia Palmer Gennert generously granted me permission to use photographs taken by her father, Alfred T. Palmer. I owe thanks to the Kuomintang (Guomindang) Party Archives, Academia Historica, Brian Mireau, and Joce Lin for providing additional images, as cited elsewhere. Also, a faculty development grant from St. Mary's College of Maryland allowed me to return to Nanjing to take my own photos for this book.

Martha L. and Charles W. Musgrove read and critiqued multiple drafts. I was extremely fortunate to have this access to the editorial insights of such talented parents, who provided their services at the “discount” family rate. I will never be able to pay them back.

Through it all, one person has helped me more than any other, my life partner: Hsueh-ping Wang. This monograph would not have been possible without her patience, optimism, and energy. I dedicate this work to her and to our daughter, Emily. It is for them that I have persevered, and it is because of them that I can look back on this time with pleasant memories, as we continue to create new ones.
