

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Because this work has engaged me for so long and has usually been a complement to other work, my debts to others are exceptionally numerous and varied. While doing other research in Indonesia funded by the National Institute of Mental Health (MH 38221) and the National Science Foundation (BNS 8310805), I began to think about films and in 1988, with the help of a sabbatical leave from the University of South Carolina and a grant from the Wenner-Gren Foundation, I was able to live in Jakarta to work specifically on cinema. I thank all these foundations and especially their review panels.

It was Gordon T. Bowles who first introduced me to the anthropological importance of popular culture in Asia. Four people were exceptionally influential in leading me to a serious consideration of cinema. Now is a chance to express my appreciation to Stanley Hoffman, Robert Gardner, Henry Breitrose, and Benjamin Dunlap. And I am tempted to mention my brother John, as well, who taught me my first lesson in the power of the cinema. It must have been around 1940, when we were both very young, and were taken to see Charlie Chaplin in The Gold Rush. At the appearance of the bear, John ran screaming from the theater. A second lesson, this time in the magic of the cinema, came from our father who at about the same period showed 8-mm versions of Walt Disney cartoons at our birthday parties. Pandora's Box run forward was fun, but when the projector was run in reverse, time turned backward and all the bad things would return to the box. Most readers will recall comparable early experiences. This book is dedicated to three who are still close to that early magic of the cinema. I hope they will come to experience also the intellectual pleasure of movies which writing this book has given their father.

I am deeply indebted to the many many people who have helped me think about Indonesian movies. Some of them are Ernest Caltenbach, Carol J. Carlisle, Wimal Dissanayake, Michael Dove, Ken George, Hadipurnomo, Malie Bruton Heider, Anne and Philip Hellman, Makmur Hendrik, Richard Howard, Eros Djarot, Teguh Karya, Umar Kayam, Kemala, Koentjaraningrat, Alex Komang, John McGlynn, the late Tuti Indra Malaon, Glen K. S.

Man, Gina Marchetti, Misbach Yusa Biran, Goenawan Mohamad, Ruth Berg Patterson, James L. Peacock, Ellen Rafferty, Douglas Ramage, Abby Ruddick, Salim Said, Asrul Sani, Laurie Sears, Krishna Sen, James T. Siegel, Ashadi Siregar, E. Gene Smith, Saraswati Sunindyo, Dea Sudarman, Ella Syahrial, Jean Gelman Taylor, Ted Wachter, Jan Wijaya, Putu Wijaya, John U. Wolff, Claire Wolfowitz, Dewi Yul, the students in my Indonesian film classes at the University of South Carolina, and an anonymous reader for the University of Hawaii Press. The still photographs from the Indonesian films were provided courtesy of the Archive of the Sinematek Indonesia at the Pusat Perfilman H. Usmar Ismail in Jakarta.

Most of them know much more about Indonesia than I shall ever know and I apologize to any whom I have offended by errors I may have made in my enthusiasm for Indonesian culture and cinema.