

Acknowledgments

This study would not have been possible without the extensive help of many Balinese, most particularly the inhabitants of Batuan. There is no adequate way that I can express my gratitude to them for their trust, tolerance, and goodwill. I hope they will forgive me for my errors.

In Bali, Professor Gusti Ngurah Bagus was a constant source of support, collegiality, and friendship. In addition, my two research assistants, I Wayan Suparto and I Nyoman Dhana, deserve many thanks. Kristina Melcher provided thoughtful help, warm friendship, and delightful amusement over the years. In Batuan, the following were of particular assistance: Déwa Putu Bratha, Déwa Ketut Baroe, Ida Bagus Ketut Alit, I Madé Djata, the late Ida Bagus Madé Togog and his son, Ida Bagus Putu Gedé, but there were also countless others.

My intellectual debts are even more numerous and widespread. Most important is that to Clifford Geertz with whom I first attempted to understand Bali and to think through what it means to interpret cultural phenomena. My ideas about Bali have been greatly influenced by the writings of and discussions with James Boon, Ann McCauley, Henk Schulte Nordholt, Adrian Vickers, Margaret Wiener, and also A. L. Becker, Judith Becker, Frederik deBoer, William Cole, Linda Connor, A. A. M. Djelantik, Shelly Errington, Anthony Forge, Jean-François Guernonprez, Hedi Hinzler, Angela Hobart, Mark Hobart, Ward Keeler, J. Stephen Lansing, Barbara Lovric, Michel Picard, Raechelle Rubinstein, Abby Ruddick, John Stowell, David Stuart-Fox, Carol Warren, and Mary Zurbuchen.

I owe thanks to Margaret Mead, who in 1972 first showed me the paintings, still packed in their original wrappings of the London Times for April 1938. I am also grateful to Lois Bateson, who owns the pictures, and to Mary Catharine Bateson, literary executor for both Bateson and Mead, for long-term loan of the pictures and permission to exhibit them, and for access to Bateson and Mead's field notes and permission to quote from them. The field notes are stored in the Margaret Mead Archives, Manuscript Division of the U.S. Library of Congress, and I am grateful to Mary Wolfskil of the library, for her assistance in finding my way among them. The Institute for Intercultural Education, founded by Margaret Mead, which administers Mead's enormous legacy, not only assisted me financially, but also made access to the files much easier.

For their work in cataloging and organizing the Bateson-Mead Collection, I am indebted to Carl Thune, Mark Whitaker, Kirsten Scheid, Pauline Caulk, and many undergraduates. For compiling a sample of photographed paintings from Bali in 1971, and for an early study of them, I owe gratitude to Uwe Hamilton.

The staffs of a number of museums and libraries were helpful: in Leiden, the Rijksmuseum voor Volkenkunde; in Basel, the Museum für Völkerkunde; in Amsterdam, the Tropenmuseum; in New York, the American Museum of Natural History. The Cornell University Indonesia Project started me off by showing me Claire Holt's slides of prewar Balinese paintings.

This manuscript was read, generously and perceptively, by Patsy Asch, Benjamin Geertz, Fred Eiseman, Ann McCauley, Raechelle Rubinstein, Kirsten Scheid, Adrian Vickers, and four anonymous readers from the University of California Press and the University of Hawaii Press. I have profited from their critiques and their warm support.

My sponsors through all this research were the Indonesian Institute of the Sciences (LIPI) and the University of Udayana in Bali. Funding was given by the Social Science Research Council, the National Science Foundation (grant nos. BNS 81-12418, BNS 84-05549, and BNS 83-14361), the Wenner-Gren Foundation, the American Council of Learned Societies, and the Princeton University Committee on Research. I am deeply grateful to all of them.
