

Acknowledgments

Writing this book has been both exciting and challenging. I plunged into this research with immense zeal, yet I faced many challenges, from writing in a second language to tackling the difficulties in translating each piece of historical and technical Chinese text, from making up for the lost time caused by a severe femur fracture to struggling with the distractions from several international moves. This book would not have been accomplished without tremendous help from so many people.

I am much obliged to Professor Maggie Bickford for her guidance and encouragement throughout the period of my writing, and I thank her for her critical comments and insights on my work. I learned a great deal from each of her comments. Her meticulousness and sensitivity to Chinese texts significantly helped improve the general quality of my translations of them. I benefited greatly from her constructive advice of reading various sources of literature in connection with my argumentation.

Professor Nancy Steinhardt deserves my deep gratitude. With her great expertise in Chinese architecture, she offered extremely important advice on my work. She has been consistently encouraging and strongly supportive. I will never forget that she invited me to talk about my research at the Society of Architectural Historians' annual meeting in 2004, the first ever conference presentation that I gave in English in my life. Her confidence in my capability and enthusiastic comments on my work indeed have given great inspiration to my writing.

Dr. Dagmar Schäfer has been important in helping me extend my research to the field of the history of technology, reviewing Chinese building manuals from a perspective of technical knowledge transmission, with further explorations of the interplay between literati and craftsmen. Thanks for her great support in going to many international conferences presenting my research and receiving feedback from peers.

I would like to express my heartfelt gratitude to Professor Francesca Bray for her guidance and input. Her comments on the Song architectural knowledge presented in the Yingzao fashi and her insights into the entanglement of scholar culture and practical culture were truly enlightening. It was also she who recommended my work to the editors of the Spatial Habitus series.

I am very thankful to Professor Richard L. Davis for his advice and guidance for investigating historical materials in relation to my research. I am also indebted to Professor Kikuko Yamashita for kindly helping me read and understand Takeshima Takuichi's work on the Yingzao fashi.

At Max Planck Institute for the History of Science, I benefited from active interactions with scholars from different institutions and different academic fields. I would like to thank all the other members of Schäfer Research Group, especially Dr. Martina Siebert, Dr. Martin Hofmann, Gina Grzimek, and Chen Wan, for their help. I am also very grateful to Professor Nathan Sivin for his guidance and kind support. In addition, I thank Professors Susan Naquin, Joachim Kurtz, Zhang Baichun, and Sun Xiaochun, as well as Dr. Matthias Schemmel for their comments and suggestions on my work.

I would like to acknowledge all scholars who raised insightful questions when I presented my research at conferences. In particular, I am thankful to Professor Dorothy Ko (Barnard College) at the 12th International Conference on the History of Science in East Asia 2008; Dr. Simona Valeriani (London School of Economy) and Dr. Marco Formisano (Humboldt University), both at the Society for History of Technology's annual meeting in Lisbon 2008; Dr. Qiong Zhang (Southern Illinois University) at New England Association for Asian Studies' annual meeting 2007; and Professor James Millward (Georgetown University) at the Association for Asian Studies' annual meeting 2008. Their questions and comments were thought-provoking and helped me improve my research or clarify my arguments in this book. I wish to give a special thanks to someone who, at the Society of Architectural Historians' annual meeting 2004, raised the question relating the architectural metaphor of bracketing in my presentation to the Greek orders. His (unfortunately I do not know his name) insight is very enlightening and I hope to be able to respond in a separate article in the near future.

I must acknowledge the Samuel H. Kress Foundation for offering me an Art History Travel Fellowship, which supported my field trip to several areas of Henan and of Hebei in 2002. In Henan, many local archaeologists and scholars in the field of cultural-relics conservation helped me in my survey of Song architectural remains. They include Mr. Qiu Gang and Li Hequn (Kaifeng Cultural Relics Bureau), Mr. Han Shunfa (Director of Kaifeng Museum), Mr. Sun Xinmin (Director of the Archaeology and Cultural Relics Research Institute of Henan), and so on. In Jiyuan, I was completely exhausted due to heat stroke and many thanks to Director of Jiyuan Cultural Relics Bureau Mr. Zhang Yongan, who kindly received me and arranged for a free one-night lodging. I also would like to thank Professor Su Bai (Beijing University) for offering his support for my field trip by writing a referral letter to Mr. Sun Xinmin.

I am really grateful to Professors Ronald G. Knapp and Xing Ruan, editors of the Spatial Habitus series, for having been very encouraging ever since they first evaluated my manuscript. I appreciate their keen interest in and full affirmation of my work. They have been patient with my procrastination many times. They also kindly offered much advice to help me get going and get through this entire process of production.

So did Ms. Patricia Crosby. She has been very patient, and it was very kind of her to try to understand my situation and offer grace periods for my submissions. She also offered her professional advice on many aspects of my book. Thanks to Cheri Dunn for her help as well.

I would like to thank Mr. Mike Ashby, Ms. Susan Richter, and Professor Paul Turner for reading through my entire manuscript, correcting my English, and editing my writing at different stages. They also offered helpful comments on my work. Professor Turner even read different versions of the introduction and helped me revise it. I am truly indebted to him for his great kindness and generosity. I am very grateful to Mr. Ashby for his highly skilled editing and constructive comments throughout my manuscript. His help has improved my writing, argumentation, and clarifications. I am also thankful to Dr. Benjamin Olshin for correcting my English on some pages of the introduction at an earlier stage.

I would like to acknowledge the main libraries of Brown University, University of Toronto, Max Planck Institute for the History of Science, and Victoria University of Wellington for the use of their collections and assistance to locate research materials. I thank the staff of the British Library for their help as well. In particular, I am grateful to Okayama Oriental Museum and Okayama University for allowing me to use their libraries when I was an independent scholar in Japan. Many people offered individual help to get materials that I needed for my research, and I wish to especially thank Mr. Wang Weihua and Ms. Bai Yan for always being ready to help.

There are still many people to whom I owe thanks for their kind help in various ways. I am deeply indebted to those who kindly took care of me and helped me recover from my femur fracture years ago. Professor James Wrenn and his wife, Harriet, took great care of me at their house and cooked nourishing hematic meals for me for a week. Professor Dore Levy and her whole family visited me many times with their sincere concern. Professor Joan Lusk visited me at the hospital several times and greatly comforted me when I was in great pain. Professors Hugh Boyle and Lung-Hua Hu, Ms. Paula Abedon, Chen Luying, Bai Yu, Dr. Ye Chuang, and many others helped me during this difficult time as well. It would have been more difficult for me to get back to my research without their help.

I would like to thank Professors Lothar Ledderose, Dieter Kuhn, Taniichi Takashi, and Liu Heping for having been encouraging and supportive. I also thank Mr. Archie McConnell for his inquiries about Chinese carpentry in relation to the Yingzao fashi. Thanks to Patricia Connally for suggesting the adding of “Chinese” to the title of this book.

Most especially to my mother, words alone cannot express what I owe her for the many sacrifices she made so that I could focus on my work. Special thanks also need to be given to Nobuko for her quiet support. The whole process of my writing was a time of great excitement, gratification, and perseverance, as well as anxiety and frustration at times. I thank her for being the one to talk to when I was in a difficult situation. In the past few years, she has turned out to be an excellent assistant to my work.
