

Acknowledgments

This book, which began life as a dissertation at the University of Chicago, has been fostered by the contributions and interest of many people. Norma Field, who first introduced me to the world of Japanese women's detective fiction when she gave me a copy of Kasha, encouraged my work on an emphatically nontraditional topic throughout my graduate career and after, while Bill Sibley has been an invaluable resource both personally and academically. My research and writing would not have been possible without financial support in the form of a Monbusho Scholarship from the Japanese Ministry of Education, a dissertation fellowship from the University of Chicago Center for East Asian Studies, and a Walter Craigie Research Fellowship from Randolph-Macon College. In Tokyo, I have benefited from the aid, generosity, and friendship of many—in particular, Professor Igarashi Akio of Rikkyo University, my mentor and sponsor; Narita Akemi; Professor Tachi Kaoru of Ochanomizu Women's University; Kim Soon Ah; Sato Shinichiro and Kobayashi Kazuko of Shinchosha, who provided invaluable insights into the Japanese literary market and the world of Japanese publishing; and Miyabe Miyuki and Matsuo Yumi, who made time in their busy schedules to discuss their work with me. At the University of Hawai'i Press, I would like to thank Pamela Kelley, who has enthusiastically supported this project from the beginning, Jennifer Harada, and Bojana Ristich for her meticulous editing.

Closer to home, I am grateful to the many colleagues who have supported me intellectually as well as emotionally, including (but not limited to) Sarah Frederick, Laura Holliday, Miho Matsugu, Eileen Mikals-Adachi, Katherine Sharnoff, Melissa Wender, Tom Porter, and especially Rebecca Copeland, who has been a generous, enthusiastic, and constructive advocate for this book and for the study of Japanese women's detective fiction more generally. Finally, I would like to thank Sean Gilsdorf, my husband, whose editing and comments made this book better and whose boundless love has sustained me throughout, and my son Benjamin, who knows the value of a good hug.
