

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

THE EDITORS WISH TO THANK Deane Neubauer, who was both the inspiration for the construction of the Globalization Research Center and its first director. Deane had the idea for the conference and was important both in helping to find just the right people to invite and in planning the structure of the conference. Although he had to take on a new and important position in the university, he was thoroughly supportive throughout. Of course, we thank the center for funding the conference and for the assistance given by his excellent staff, currently headed by Barry Gillis. Like Deane, Barry has been a terrific shoulder to lean on. Of his staff, we thank especially James White, Troy Knott, and Nicole Robinson. Perhaps the most vital person as regards the conference was Yvonne Yamashita, who had the onerous task of seeing to the arrangements for the conference site, travel, accommodations, and a host of other details. We thank you, Yvonne.

One essay in the present volume, by Richard Ruch, was based on his book, Higher Ed. Inc. It is reproduced here, in revised form, with the permission of Dr. Ruch and the Johns Hopkins Press.

JAISHREE K. ODIN AND PETER T. MANICAS

