

Acknowledgments

Having reached the “twilight” of my academic career, I have a greater appreciation of any of my projects that reach fruition. This particular book has been long in the making, not only because of the demands of teaching but also because of having ventured into academic disciplines and cultural areas that were less familiar to me. In the process I have benefited immensely from the generosity of many individuals who were willing to guide me through difficult material. It makes one aware that in any academic enterprise, collegial cooperation is essential. To the following colleagues, many of whom read sections of the manuscript, I would like to express my sincere gratitude for their help: Taufik Abdullah, Sander Adelaar, Jane Allen, Geoffrey Benjamin, Leonard Blussé, Robert Blust, David Bulbeck, Cynthia Chou, Robert Dentan, Juli Edo, Kirk Endicott, Jeff Hadler, Tsuyoshi Kato, Uli Kozok, Michael Laffan, Adri Lopian, Henk Maier, John Miksic, Henk Niemeijer, Colin Nicholas, Wannasarn Noonsuk, Jon Okamura, Nathan Porath, Jim Scott, Miriam Stark, and Wazir Johan Karim. Any omission of a name is not deliberate, but simply a sign of failing memory.

The major part of the research was undertaken in Indonesia, Malaysia, and the Netherlands in 1999–2000 through the Fulbright-Hays Program, and I would like to acknowledge the generous funding that made all of this possible. In the Netherlands in 2000 I was fortunate to have been a Fellow-in-Residence at the Netherlands Institute for Advanced Study. I would like to take this opportunity to express my sincere appreciation to the staff for the opportunity to meet such intellectually stimulating colleagues from all parts of the world and for all the wonderful support facilities in conducting research in that country. The Netherlands has some of the best libraries and archives in the world for the study of Indonesia, and I would like to express my thanks to the staff at the National Archives of the Netherlands in The Hague and at the library of the Royal Institute of Southeast Asian and Caribbean Studies (KITLV), especially Sirtjo Koolhof, for their help during my research in their institutions. In Indonesia I benefited from the kindness of members of LIPI (Indonesian Institute of Sciences), particularly my friend and colleague, Dr. Taufik Abdullah. I also would like to thank the helpful staffs in Malaysia of the Malaysian-American Commission on Educational Exchange (MACEE) and the Asia-Europe Institute at the University of Malaya, and particularly their generous and gracious executive directors, Dr. Don McCloud and Dr. Shaharil Thalib. Back home at the University of Hawai'i, I would like to express my appreciation to Yati Paseng, our Southeast Asian bibliographer, who continues to make a researcher's life a pleasant one. To the staff of the University of Hawai'i Press, particularly Pam Kelley, my sincere thanks for the very helpful suggestions in the preparation and the completion of the manuscript. I am also grateful to Jane J. Eckelman, who so patiently drew and redrew maps to my specifications, and to the University of Hawai'i Research Relations Fund for their financial assistance.

Once again, as in my previous works, I owe so very much to my wife and colleague, Barbara Watson Andaya, who has been so patient and long-suffering. Having married another Southeast Asian historian has had many benefits, of which having a captive reader is one. Throughout this project she has helped me to think through many difficult problems in conceptualization, and in the final stages she has patiently (encouraged by promises of Starbucks coffee) waded through the manuscript identifying inconsistencies, lapses in analysis, etc. It makes me realize that O.W. Wolters perhaps was not being sexist but merely pragmatic when he jokingly told his (male) students: "Marry a typist." I actually type better than Barbara, but she obviously has many more redeeming qualities, and for that I am immensely grateful.

To all of you, my heartfelt thanks.
