

Acknowledgments

First and foremost, this book could not have been written had it not been for the many who have contributed to our understanding of both the Cold War and Southeast Asia. From them I have learned and benefited so much. I hope I have properly acknowledged them in my narrative.

I am very grateful to Professors Robert Taylor and Nicholas Tarling who took time to read and comment on my draft chapters, and to Pamela Kelley for her editorial guidance. All three of them have helped me improve my narrative considerably. Having said that, any mistakes and shortcomings in this book are my own.

I wish also to express my deepest appreciation to Professor Arne Westad, who has been most encouraging and supportive.

The S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies, where I am based, provided a conducive environment for me to research and write this book. I wish to thank the dean, Professor Joseph Liow, as well as my colleagues Chong Yee Ming, Daniel Chua, Michael Montesano, and Bhubhindar Singh. Also, Gillian Png and last but not least, Weilun Chia.
