

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

It is almost a miracle to me that my research is now complete and published as a book. This could not have been done without the help, support, and encouragement of the following people.

Beyond words to express is my deep gratitude to Nancy S. Steinhardt for her patient guidance, enthusiastic encouragement, and critical comments, from the manuscript's early stages to its transformation into a scholarly monograph. It could never have become a reality without her continuous and meticulous critiques of my writing, her handholding whenever the project encountered doubts and difficulties, and the inspiration I received from her lectures and publications as well as our conversations. She has emboldened me to reconsider Chinese architecture in different contexts and from differing perspectives and encouraged me to challenge long-standing ideas and arguments.

I would also like to express my earnest thanks to Sun Hua, Xu Yitao, and Li Zhirong for their decades of mentoring ever since I was an undergraduate at Peking University. The topic of this research was initially suggested by Professor Sun, and he provided me with valuable field-trip connections. My first ever field trip to survey architecture was supervised by Professors Xu and Li. My research journey into Chinese architecture could not have gone this far without their guidance and critiques throughout the years. My great appreciation also goes to my professors in the special program of Heritage Architecture at Peking University: Wang Guixiang, Wang Qiming, Nan Shunxun, Liu Quanyi, and Zhou Hongzhi. The training I received as an archaeologist and a historian at Peking University laid the foundation of my entire career in academia.

Advice given me by my professors at the University of Pennsylvania was a great help in completing this work. I thank Victor H. Mair and Frank L. Chance for reading my manuscript at an early stage and for their insightful comments. Especially, I am thankful to Professor Mair for his valuable suggestions in understanding and translating Buddhist texts. I would also like to thank Paul R. Goldin for his training in working with Chinese historical texts and Julie N. Davis, with her expertise in Japanese art and architecture, for her mentoring.

Special thanks are also due to the anonymous reviewers of this book for their constructive suggestions. In addition, I wish to acknowledge valuable comments of Tracy Miller and Delin Lai. It is always inspiring and motivating to have discussions and conversations with them on numerous topics for research.

I owe the following people a great deal for their generosity in providing beautiful photos and drawings for this book: Zhang Jianwei, Huang Xiaofan, Zhao Yuanxiang, Cai Yukun, Wu Yunan, Luo Dengke, Gao Feng, and Li Xinjian. Especially, I thank Zhao Yuanxiang and Cai Yukun for sharing their up-to-date research and discoveries with me. I must also acknowledge Huang Shilin, who arranged living accommodations for me during my field trip in Sichuan and personally escorted me (along with his super nice driver) to several sites. Moreover, I am deeply grateful to the local administrators of the sites at Emei, Nanbu, Langzhong, Zitong, Lushan, and Meishan, who granted me unlimited access to those sites and generously shared their relevant records and documents with me. It would have been impossible to work on this project without their help.

As a non-native speaker of English, I would like to give a special thanks to Karen Vellucci and Aurelia Campbell for reading the entire manuscript, correcting my English, and editing at different stages. I also owe Zhao Lu and Kelsey Seymour thanks for their help with translations of classic Chinese.

My great appreciation also goes to my fellow classmates and friends at Peking University with whom I worked in the classroom and during numerous field trips. I could not have accomplished much in my later research without their decades of support and friendship.

My graduate program community at the University of Pennsylvania provided me with support and inspiration. My research and intellectual maturity have benefited from many seminar sessions, graduate student colloquiums, lunch conversations, coffee chats, and e-mail correspondences with them. I am especially grateful to Alexandra Harrer, Aurelia Campbell, Morita Miki, Zhang Jianwei, Zhao Lu, and Ren Sijie, who gave me advice and help for this book. Special thanks go to Tse Wai Kit Wicky, who suggested the book's main title.

I would also like to thank the Provost's Office at Swarthmore College for providing me with research grants to cover expenses while I was working on the manuscript, and my wonderful colleagues there who gave me help and support with my teaching and research. Special thanks go to Alan Berkowitz, who passed away several years ago. His support and friendship will never be forgotten.

I owe my colleagues at the United State Naval Academy appreciation for their support and help in completing this manuscript: my department chairs, Clementine Fujimura and Thomas Wagener; my mentor, Joseph J. Gwara; and my colleagues in the Chinese program, Fangyuan Yuan and Wenze Hu. I also want to extend my gratitude to the Dean's Office for their financial support. I thank Reza Malek-Madani and Karyn Sproles for their guidance in acquiring the publication grant.

I cannot express enough thanks to Ronald G. Knapp and Xing Ruan, editors of the Spatial Habitus series, for being encouraging and patient ever since I first submitted my book proposal. They carefully reviewed my manuscript and offered me invaluable suggestions. I would also like to thank Stephanie Chun, my acquisition editor at the University of Hawai'i Press, for her professional advice and her help with the logistics of submitting the manuscript. I also owe Barbara Folsom thanks for her professional editing.

It is a pleasure to thank my friends Rochelle and Eric Mayer for their moral support during difficult times in this journey.

Finally, my deep and sincere gratitude goes to my family for their continuous and unparalleled love, help, and support. I am forever indebted to my parents, who selflessly encouraged me to explore the world and gave me the freedom to choose the profession that I desired. I am grateful to my in-laws for babysitting and helping with a great deal of housework so I can focus on my work. And I owe particular thanks to a very special person, my husband, Jun, for his constant and unfailing love, support, and understanding. This work would not have been possible without his companionship during numerous field trips. He was always around at times when I feared this project was impossible to continue. Last, I thank my little boy, Kai, who was patient enough to wait to enter my life until after most of the manuscript was completed.
