The story of Claus Spreckels in Hawaii has been a fascinating quest, in the pursuit of which I have had much help. My chief intellectual debt is to the late Professor Ralph S. Kuykendall, the foremost historian of Hawaii. He generously permitted me to read parts of the manuscript for the third volume (on the Kalakaua dynasty) of his definitive Hawaiian Kingdom.

Charles H. Hunter, Professor of History at the University of Hawaii, has given me vigorous and helpful criticism. For comment on major parts of the manuscript I am indebted to Shelley M. Mark, Director of Planning and Economic Development, State of Hawaii; Daniel M. Slate, Professor of Economics, University of Illinois; James H. Shoemaker, Vice-President for Research, Bank of Hawaii; and Henry David and Carter Goodrich, former professors of economics, Columbia University.

Parts of the work have been read by Professors Harold S. Roberts, Charles A. Moore, Arthur J. Marder, A. Grove Day, W. W. Cordray, William E. Huntsberry, and Russell Taussig; and also by Miss Albertine Loomis of the Hawaiian Historical Society, and Meiric K. Dutton, former President of the Society.

For perceptive criticism of the manuscript from the viewpoint of the average reader, I am indebted to Mrs. Margaret Solomon.

Any errors remaining are chargeable, of course, solely to my account.

For help in gathering material I am greatly obliged to Miss Agnes

Acknowledgments

Conrad, Archivist of the State of Hawaii, and her staff, especially Henry C. K. Choy, Mrs. Aurora Domingo, Jack Mathews, Mrs. Philomena A. Morrison, and Mrs. Doris Takeshita; Miss Janet E. Bell, Curator of the Hawaiian and Pacific Collection, Gregg M. Sinclair Library, University of Hawaii, and her staff; Mrs. Clara C. Ching, Assistant Librarian for Documents and Maps, Sinclair Library; Mrs. Willowdean C. Handy, former Librarian of the Hawaiian Historical Society; and Miss Bernice Judd, former Librarian of the Hawaii Mission Children's Society.

I am also indebted to:

The University of Hawaii Press Committee, and especially to Thomas Nickerson, Director of the Press, and Mrs. Aldyth V. Morris, former Managing Editor, for encouraging publication of this work.

Robert W. Sparks, Managing Editor of the University of Hawaii Press, for educating me on the many details of getting a book into print.

Joseph Feher, Artist-Historian of the Bishop Museum and the Honolulu Academy of Arts, not only for designing and illustrating this book but also for many hours of conversation about things Hawaiian.

The time from conception to birth for this book has been overlong. But I am glad to acknowledge that parts of it, in different form, have appeared in Hawaiian Historical Society Annual Reports, Paradise of the Pacific, Honolulu Advertiser, Honolulu Star-Bulletin, Numismatist, Berliner Numismatische Zeitschrift, Explorations in Entrepreneurial History, California Historical Society Quarterly, Business History Review, Pacific Historical Review, and Agricultural History.

Let me add a bit of harmless information which nevertheless acknowledges a very real debt. This book was written mainly in Waikiki coffee shops and hotel lobbies. No phones rang. The passers-by did not interrupt or disturb me.

Finally, my greatest debt of all—to my wife, for reasons that anyone who has ever tried to write can easily guess.

J. A.
