

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In the course of writing this book I have been fortunate to receive comments and ideas from numerous colleagues including James Carrier, David Graeber, J-K Gibson Graham (Julie Graham and Katherine Gibson), Chris Hann, Arjo Klamer, Frederique Appfel-Marglin, David Ruccio, Will Milberg, Ivo Strecker, and Thomas Wallgren. Over the years, Keith Hart and I have sustained a conversation on economic anthropology, and he has been a supporter and helpful critic. I thank as well the Austrian economics group at George Mason University who provided me with many comments on an earlier version of Chapter 3. Stephen Marglin and I independently reached the idea of two forms of “epistemology,” and I have been fortunate to learn his thoughts on economics. Portions of the book were presented at the Max Planck Institute for Social Anthropology in Haale, and I appreciate the support of Chris Hann and his colleagues. I am especially indebted to the Swedish Collegium for Advanced Study in the Social Sciences in Uppsala, where I began this work as a fellow in 2002–03. I thank its directors, Björn Witrock, Barbro Klein, and Göran Therborn, and my helpful colleagues there, especially Patricia Springborg. During that academic year, Stefan Löfving organized a conference on my work at the University of Uppsala and published the results as a book (Löfving 2005). I am very grateful to him for his thoughts and support, and to the book’s contributors, whose responses partly stimulated this volume.

A version of some material in Chapters 2 and 4 was published in 2005 as “Community and Economy: Economy’s Base,” in Handbook of Economic Anthropology, ed. James G. Carrier (Cheltenham: Edward Elgar, pp. 94–106). An earlier version of Chapter 3 appeared in 2006 as “Trade’s Reason,” Max Planck Institute for Social Anthropology Working Paper no. 81, Haale/Saale. ISSN 1615-4568.
