This story of Arnold Platt's life owes much to the encouragement and support of those who knew him. Their contributions are noted in the sections on sources and in the notes. Helen Platt and the Platt family entrusted me with all the materials they had and they shared their recollections without reservation. While Helen Platt read the manuscript as it developed and suggested ways to amplify a point, she never said or implied "you shouldn't say that."

Michael Luski, acquisitions editor at the University of Alberta Press continued to believe in the project through the years that it took to go from an idea to a draft, even though he had never met Arnold Platt. Brenda Belokrinicev edited the manuscript, created the index, and ensured that the notes were accurate and complete. Her improvements to the text took away the usual anxieties about revision as they so obviously respected my intentions as they made the narrative more readable.

David Marshall, president of Mount Royal College, provided me with the year's leave that allowed me to stop talking about the project and actually do it. A research grant from the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation made possible the necessary travel.

Kathleen Hogan, my wife, not only was my first reader whose knowledge of both substance and style prevented innumerable inaccuracies and infelicities of expression, but was also, in her professional capacity as a librarian, an invaluable guide to sources.

In spite of all the support and assistance I've received, readers will undoubtedly find inaccuracies and may note omissions. For these, I alone am responsible.
