

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book is a product of years of thinking, research and writing. But equally, it is a product of the conversations I had with so many great minds over the years. Acknowledgements are one of my favorite parts to read in the books of others, and it is a pleasure to write one for this book. Yet at the same time, I know that I will not be able to do justice to all those who contributed to what has now become this book.

Over the years, I have presented parts of this research and have gotten feedback for it at various talks, workshops and conferences. I presented different parts of my work that culminated in the chapters of this book at several Annual Meetings on the following panels: ‘Gezi Park Protests: Debating the Terms of Politics, Democracy and Participation’ (2014 Middle East Studies Association), ‘Patriarchy, State and Legitimacy in Turkey’ (2015 Middle East Studies Association), ‘Revolutions and Counterrevolutions’ (2016 American Political Science Association Annual Conference), ‘Historical Memory and Remembering in Democratic and Authoritarian Politics’ (2021 American Political Science Association), ‘Populism and Populist Discourse: National Cases and Comparative Perspective’ (2021 International Political Science Association) and ‘Populist Practices in Comparative Perspectives’ (2021 Canadian Political Science Association). I deeply appreciate the contributions of the participants of these events. I would particularly like to thank the discussants of my papers, John Vanderlippe, Özlem Altıok, Isaac Kamola, Dovile Budryte, Mark Farha and Isabelle Cote for their insightful comments and their engagement with my works in progress.

I would also like to thank the participants of the Turkish–German Frontiers of Social Science Symposium (TUGFOSS), which was held in Potsdam in 2018, for their feedback. I am especially grateful to Erdem Aytaç and Selin Akyüz, who invited me to present my early ideas on populism and political narratives at the symposium and provided me with invaluable feedback. At the Middle Technical University, I received very insightful feedback from the participants of the Political Science and Public Administration Departmental Seminar in 2021, especially from Ayşe Ayata, Aslı Çırakman and Başak Alpan with regard to populism and collective memory in Turkey.

Also, I would like to extend my gratitude to the participants of the 2022 European Consortium of Political Research Joint Sessions Workshop ‘Gender and the Rise of Authoritarianism’, Cristina Chiva, Petra Guasti, Pär Zetterberg, İrem Tuncer-Ebetürk, Berfin Çakın, Lynda Gilby, Natalia Kovyliava and Alexandros Tokhi, especially Cristina and Petra, who not only organised the panel, but also provided impeccable feedback on my work as discussants. I would also like to thank Luca Manucci, who, as the editor of Populism Interviews: A Dialogue with Leading Experts (Routledge, 2022), not only made me part of that project, but also gave me reasons to think deeply about the relationship between populism and collective memory with his thoughtful questions.

More recently, I was fortunate enough to be part of a panel at the University of Pennsylvania titled ‘The Construction of National Citizenships: Competing Paradigms’ organised in honour of Rogers Smith’s retirement. I am thankful for the participants of this panel, particularly Ian Lustick, Jeff Green, Nancy Hirschmann, Elspeth Wilson, Sarah Song and Harris Mylonas for inspiring me to reflect on some of the most pressing domestic and global issues regarding narratives and politics. Ian Lustick, my dissertation supervisor more than a decade ago, still continues to have a lasting effect on what and how I write thanks to his sharp intellect and conscientious approach to politics. Likewise, my conversations with Rogers Smith, and his work on stories of peoplehood, have been a constant source of inspiration and intellectual development for me over the years.

I would also like to thank the editors at the Edinburgh University Press, Gillian Leslie, Ersev Ersoy, Emma House and Louise Hutton for all their efforts along the way. They were the best editors one could hope for. I am truly grateful. The series editors, Alpaslan Özerdem and Ahmet Erdi Öztürk, also provided invaluable, constructive insights that improved the book tremendously. Of course, I am also extremely grateful to the anonymous reviewers for providing the most helpful, intellectually stimulating, and knowledgeable feedback possible. Parts of Chapter 3 have appeared in The Political Quarterly (2015, 86 (3): 359–63) and METU Studies in Development (2017, 44 (April): 47–67). I would like to thank the journals, their editors and the anonymous reviewers for their feedback. I am also grateful to Koç University-VEKAM for letting me use images from their archive.

I would like to thank my friends and colleagues Tekin Köse, Senem Yıldırım Özdem, Alev Çınar, İlker Aytürk, Bülent Batuman and Daniel Just for their insights, support, encouragement and wisdom. Our graduate students, and my co-authors on other projects of collective memory, historical narratives, and narratives of the Left, Ali Açıkgöz, Berat Uygur Altınok and Gökhan Şensönmez: it has been a source of joy and pride to see how you have become the wonderful thinkers and scholars you are.

I am thankful to my mother Sıdika Uğur, my father Behzat Uğur, my sister Emel and my niece Nehir for being my family and making life more meaningful for me. My husband, Kürşat Çınar, who has witnessed all the stages of this work and contributed to it with his insights and endless support, deserves a special ‘thank you’. I would also like to thank my daughter Bahar so much, for the hope in her eyes, for her kindness and warmth, and for motivating me along the way, by saying, ‘yaz, anne, yaz’.
