

Acknowledgements

‘Footnotes always seem comic to a certain type of mind’, Nabokov once wrote (BS, xii). Be that as it may, they are one sign of my obligation to those who have written so insightfully about Nabokov, humour and Nabokov’s humour. For their words of encouragement over the years, I thank all of my friends and fellow scholars in the Nabokov community. Special thanks to Brian Boyd, who supervised the doctorate from which this book emerged, in very different form: his generous advice, editorial acumen and long-standing support have been invaluable and are deeply appreciated. Thanks to everyone at Edinburgh University Press for guiding the book to publication: Emily Sharp, Elizabeth Fraser and Michelle Houston, who originally commissioned the study; thanks also to my two anonymous readers for their close reading and helpful suggestions. My wife, Kate, has been my first reader, editor and proofreader for more years than she probably cares to remember: this book is dedicated to her and to our three children, Duncan, Frances and James, who may get round to reading it one day.

* * *

Thanks to the Wylie Agency and to the publishers and editors for permission to reuse, in modified form, material that originally appeared in the following essays: ‘Nabokov’s Last Laughs’, in Nabokov’s World, Vol. 1: The Shape of Nabokov’s World, ed. by Jane Grayson, Arnold P. McMillin and Priscilla Meyer (Palgrave Macmillan, 2002), 141–58; and ‘Belly and Brain, Mind and Matter: An Upside Down Look at Nabokov’s Humor’, in Nabokov Upside Down, ed. by Brian Boyd and Marijeta Bozovich (Northwestern University Press, 2017), 57–68. Copyright © 2017 by Brian Boyd and Marijeta Bozovic. Published 2017 by Northwestern University Press. All rights reserved.