

Acknowledgements

We are so grateful for Carol Macdonald, Souhaila Jouhar and all the wonderful EUP folk. Some of us have worked with you on many projects for many years, but this one was different. It took a long time. No matter how strange or outlandish a project may be, you still trust us. We're not sure why, but we're very grateful for it. We hope that this final project proves that trust was worthwhile. For us, EUP is the most interesting philosophy publisher out there today, and so much of that is due to Carol. How boring would continental philosophy be without her.

Huge thanks to Andrew LaZella and Richard Lee for resurrecting this translation and believing in it. Without you, this project would probably have been stillborn forever. As Andrew said, y'all were like producers and the rest of us were the directors, cinematographers and actors. Most of all, this all grew out of those strange, complicated reading groups that formed in the early months of the COVID-19 pandemic, and we are grateful to all of you, too. These networks and friends kept us sane during those dark days of the pandemic, as something incorporeal surged through those hours on screens and pulled us all together.

A big thank you to Fen Inman for such excellent work on handling the Greek, and to our comrade Sinan Turan who read it all, despite it being outside his wheelhouse to a certain extent. Philosophy never happens alone. We are thus grateful to all our friends, families and colleagues who supported and tolerated us. Ryan is eternally grateful to his amazing partner, Erin Rutherford, the centre of his world. Jared is also eternally grateful to Constanza

Filloy, who is the best and most loving philosophical interlocutor that one could ever hope for.

Thomas thanks his 2013 research assistant Layla Dargaud for her excellent work on references to Stoicism in French philosophy, that has been crucial to his own research on the subject for the last eleven years, Claudio Majolino for their discussions since being invited in his STL seminar on the notion of event (in 2014), and Iskandar Khojiev for useful suggestions. Thomas is above all grateful to Ryan for his patience, his enthusiasm and support, and to Ryan and Jared for their many suggestions on two successive drafts of his essay.