

Acknowledgments

The editors would like to thank Lako Tongun, Michael Ballagh, and Susan Phillips for helping organize the conference, Interdisciplinarity and Social Justice, on February 11–12, 2005, at Pitzer College, where several of the papers included here were first presented. Funding for that conference came from the Printed Word funds and an anonymous donor at Pitzer College, and an additional Research and Awards grant from Pitzer College supported publication costs.

Appreciation is due to Anish Kapoor, who kindly gave his permission to reproduce the illustrations of “Marsyas” (2002) in Lisa Lowe’s essay. Lindon Barrett’s essay includes excerpts from “Mercantilism, U.S. Federalism, and the Market Within Reason” published in Accelerating Possession: Global Futures of Property and Personhood, ed. Bill Maurer and Gabriele Schwab (Columbia University Press, 2006), 99–131. Portions of Ellen Messer-Davidow’s essay were previously published as “Why Democracy Will Be Hard To Do” in Social Text, vol. 24 (Spring 2006): 1–35, Duke University Press. Mary Romero’s contribution is reprinted from Contemporary Justice Review, 11.1 (Mar. 2008): 23–37. A fuller version of Robyn Wiegman’s essay appeared in Boundary 2, vol. 26, no. 3 (1999): 115–50, Duke University Press.

Comments from an anonymous peer reviewer were helpful in developing the volume, as was the work of Larin McLaughlin, our SUNY Press editor. We thank Daniella Gutierrez and Rebekah Sinclair for compiling our index.

We also thank Winston James and Leila Neti for helping bring Lindon Barrett’s essay to publication. The passing of Lindon Barrett at such a young age was a tragic and unfortunate event for interdisciplinary studies and for us all.

The editorial process has weathered surgeries, adoptions, multiple moves, computer crashes, and other events. We owe a debt of gratitude to our families for their support and to our colleagues for their patience and perseverance. Ranu Samantrai would like to dedicate her work on the volume to her brother, Rajeev Samantrai, who would have been its first and most enthusiastic reader.
