

Acknowledgments

Over the course of eight years spent researching and writing this book, many people aided and supported me. I am indebted to those who generously provided information or who facilitated the process of finding it: Terry Ariano, Somers Historical Society; Joan Berkowitz, Jablonski Berkowitz Conservation, Inc.; Heather Craane, Jay Heritage Center; Karen L. Frederick, Curator of Museum Collections, Greenwich Historical Society; Bill Gorman, New York State Archives; Jackie Graziano, Westchester County Archives; Eva Guggemos, Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript Library, Yale University; Steven Haynes, Maine Granite Industry Historical Society; Margaret K. Hofer, Curator of Decorative Arts, New-York Historical Society; Joy Kestenbaum, Lauren Lazar, and Carrie Marten, Purchase College Library; Thomas Lannon and Lee Robinson, New York Public Library; Russell Lord, Metropolitan Museum of Art; Sarah Hermanson Meister, Katie Trainor, and Leslie Ureña, Museum of Modern Art; Gloria Pritts, Town of Mamaroneck Archives; and Jeffrey Williams, Westchester County Department of Planning. In addition, I would like to thank the following individuals and institutions: Susan Benton, Mamaroneck Public Library; Lynne Crowley, Larchmont Historical Society; Coi Drummond-Gehrig, Denver Public Library; Estate of Edward Steichen; Nancy Finlay and John Potter, Connecticut Historical Society; Todd Fix and Richard Wills, Royal Barry Wills Associates; Cynthia Gallaher, Neysa McMein Virtual Museum; Rory Glaeseman, Journal News; Pat Gordon and Vivian M. Santangelo, Meredith Corporation; Erica Green, Anne & Gordon Samstag Museum of Art, University of South Australia; Annika Keller and Tricia Smith, Art Resource; Library of Congress, Geography and Map Division and Prints and Photographs Division; Matthew Lutts, AP Images; Liz Mahoney, Environmental Data Resources; Carolyn B. Mandelker, Harrison Edwards Public Relations & Marketing; Arlene May, Sears Holdings Historical Archives; Metropolitan Museum of Art; Kathleen Mylen-Coulombe, Yale University Art Gallery; Emma Rock; Caroline Robinson, Roton Point Association; Charles Seton, photographer; Town of Mamaroneck Assessor's Department; Westchester County Historical Society; Laurie Platt Winfrey, Carousel Research, Inc.; and Dallan C. Wordekemper, United States Postal Service.

Special thanks are due to Lori Friedli, head of adult reference, Mamaroneck Public Library, for help with some of the images and for asking, "Are you writing a book?" when I didn't yet know that I was, and to Thomas J. Schwarz, president, Purchase College, State University of New York, who responded warmly to an early presentation of the material and first recognized the value of including information on the research methodology.

Research involves a web, the linking of many threads in an ever-expanding network. The people who helped with the threads, giving me ideas or leads to other sources, include Jim Frank, Tom Panetiere, Richard Pieper, Marty Rennert, Ken Resen, Marj Simon, Simon D. Smith, Judy and Sol Tane, and Atiba Wilson. Several people kindly granted me access to their property: Kira and Brian Nickerson, Wendy Satin, and Mr. and Mrs. James Spindelman.

I am grateful to the many friends who gamely jumped into brainstorming with me as I wrestled with various hypotheses and who came up with numerous great ideas: Katherine Duncan Aimone and Steven Aimone; Don Ferencz; Scott Larson and Avis Larson, who purchased McCall's magazine on eBay for me; Charles Lyman, who assigned one of my mysteries to his materials lab class at Lehigh University and then helped me understand the results, and his student, Alexander Hollenbach, who spent two semesters at Lehigh University researching the date of the metal stakes; Page McBrier and Peter Morrison; Jon Pattengill; and members of the Neuberger Museum of Art volunteer research committee, who acted as a patient sounding board at moments throughout the project.

Many people provided advice and encouragement. Tracy Fitzpatrick, Lucy Hedrick, and Louisa V. North helped with guidance on the complexities of the publishing industry; Tom Foster and Dinah Seiver shared their experiences with publishing and copyright issues; and Beth Silver offered support and wise counsel in conjunction with another research and writing project unrelated to this book. Michael Lobel gave me encouragement on my writing as well as advice on publishing, and Patrice Giasson and Helaine Posner validated my editing skills. Patricia Bice and the Purchase College Professional Council invited me to present my research at an early stage, and many Purchase College and Neuberger Museum of Art colleagues responded positively to the presentation. Vicki Adesso, Beverley Brigandi, Michael Dick, Robert Funicello, Ann Ladd, Aline Libassi, Valerie Livingston, Tom Morck, Charles Phillips, Ginny Phillips, Marjatta Rautionmaa, and the docents of the Neuberger Museum of Art were interested cheerleaders. Debbie Allen and Steve Hoare of the Black Dome Press went out of their way to offer encouragement and suggestions after reviewing my book proposal. My editors at SUNY Press, James Peltz, Laurie D. Searl, and Timothy Loughman, guided the manuscript from acquisition to publication with amiability and aplomb.

I was fortunate to receive funds to support aspects of my research from Purchase College, State University of New York. Elizabeth G. Fuller and Katherine M. Hite, Westchester County Historical Society, and Chris Pryslopski, Hudson River Valley Institute at Marist College, decided to publish my articles, earlier versions of chapters two and six, in the Westchester Historian and the Hudson River Valley Review respectively, for which I am grateful. Richard Pieper and Simon D. Smith kindly allowed me to quote from their e-mails to me.

I would like to acknowledge my late parents for the dual gifts of appreciation for images and for history. My father was a serious photographer and my mother was passionate about history. On road trips he would take thousands of photographs to document our family vacations and she would stop regularly by the side of the road to read historic site markers, exclaiming, “Just think, it happened right here.”

To my family I owe the most gratitude—to my daughter, Liz Blake, for always being encouraging, for helping with the maps, and for coming up with a key idea for chapter ten, and to my husband, Michael Torlen, for sharing the adventure of finding and living in our house, for being consistently supportive, even when he was writing his own book and pursuing other creative projects, for taking over more than his share of the domestic duties during the final few months of manuscript preparation, and for assisting in many aspects of preparing this book, in particular, long hours spent working with me on the illustrations. Without his support the book would not have been written.

FIGURE O.1 The house today. (Photo by author.)