

Contents

|                                                                                   |      |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| Illustrations                                                                     | vii  |
| Preface                                                                           | xi   |
| Acknowledgments                                                                   | xiii |
| Chapter 1                                                                     |      |
| “How I Would Like to Lead Such a Regiment asThis to Battle”                   | 1    |
| Chapter 2                                                                     |      |
| “Oh, That We Could Fight”                                                         | 31   |
| Chapter 3                                                                     |      |
| “Morris is a Hero”—The Battle of Gettysburg                                       | 55   |
| Chapter 4                                                                     |      |
| “I Rallied on the Right”—Charged ‘Bayonets’”                                      | 75   |
| Chapter 5                                                                     |      |
| “You Can Bet We Are Going to Have a Terrible Battle”:Spring 1864              | 103  |
| Chapter 6                                                                     |      |
| “Fight All Day and March All Night”                                               | 127  |
| Chapter 7                                                                     |      |
| “Anyone Who Comes Out of This Campaign Aliveis a Very Fortunate Being. . . .” | 151  |

|                            |     |
|----------------------------|-----|
| Chapter 8                  |     |
| “Oh, My Poor Poor Brother” | 183 |
| Notes                      | 191 |
| Bibliography               | 211 |
| Index                      | 219 |