

Acknowledgments

I am enormously indebted to my professors Edna Lomsky-Feder and Eyal Ben-Ari of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, for their invaluable guidance, support and belief in this project.

This project began as my doctoral dissertation at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, and it could never have come to fruition without generous funding and support from several sources. Preliminary research for the book was enabled by the Social Sciences Faculty Rector's Scholarship of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, the Minerva Foundation, DAAD Scholarship, the Jewish Memorial Foundation, and a fieldwork grant from the Shaine Center of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology, the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. During the writing I was supported by a Fulbright Scholarship, the Hebrew University of Jerusalem Postdoctoral Grant, by Shapira Postdoctoral Fellowship at Tel Aviv University, and by the Postdoctoral Fellowship at the Department of Sociology, Political Science and Communication at the Open University, Israel.

Several centers and institutions provided their support at a later stage of the project, as the dissertation began to take shape as a book. First of these are the Institute of Slavic, East European and Eurasian Studies at the University of California, Berkeley, and the Jewish Studies Program at the University of California, Davis. I am particularly grateful to Diane Wolf, head of the Jewish Studies Program at UC Davis, for her warmth and support. The Research Institute for Innovation in Education, the Hebrew University of Jerusalem provided a quite harbor in the final stages of my work on the project, and I would like to extend special thanks to Gad Yair and Ayala Berkovich from this institution.

Over the years, a number of scholars have provided me with invaluable support. I am especially grateful to Zvi Gitelman and Anna Shternshis for their interest in my work and for their encouragement, and to Michael Krutikov for a meaningful and intellectually inspiring encounter. I would like to extend special thanks to Yuri Slezkine for his critical and challenging comments. At a few stages along the way, I was fortunate to work with and receive guidance from Janet Dixon Keller. Don Handelman's thoughts were a source of inspiration throughout my work.

Many colleagues and friends have shared their support and intellectual curiosity over the years. I am grateful in particular to Elly Teman. I would also like to thank Nina Anderson, Efrat Ben Zeev, Marci Borenstein, Tamar Cohen, Lauren Erdreich, Lidia Ginsburg, Yona Golan, Debbie Golden, Tsipi Ivri, Marion Kahnemann, Jenny Kaminer, Steven Kaplan, Adi Kuntsman, Nurit Novis, Pinhas Shtern, Ruth and Heinz Rocher, Ruth and Bar Shacterman, Rita Vishniakova, Erica Weiss, Anna and Michael Yudolovich, Michael Yuniverg, and Julia Zakharov.

My heartfelt thanks go to Michael Rinella, my editor at the State University of New York Press, for his sincere interest in this project and for his support and persistence, which enabled this book to come into being. I thank Rafael Chaiken, Emily Keneston, Sue Morreale, Laurie Searl, Anne Valentine, and especially my copy editor Willa Speiser for their expertise and for making the publication process as smooth as possible. I would also like to thank the three anonymous reviewers of this book for their suggestions, feedback, and generosity.

My deepest gratitude goes to my family—Vitaly, Adi, and Liza Lubart—for their tolerance and love.

Parts of Chapter 6 of this book were previously published in the article "Labor Activation Policies and the Seriousness of Activated Work" (Social Anthropology) and in the article "All That Is Just Ersatz: The Meaning of Work in the Life of Immigrant Newcomers" (Ethos). I would like to thank Blackwell Publishing, and John Wiley & Sons and the American Anthropological Association for permitting me to use these sections. Parts of Chapter 6 appeared in the article "Impostors of Themselves: Performing Jewishness and Revitalizing Jewish Life among Russian Jews in Contemporary Germany" (Social Identities). Chapter 8 has been adapted and reworked from the previously published article "Haunting Images: Stereotypes of Jewishness among Russian Jewish Immigrants in Germany" (East European Jewish Affairs). I am grateful to the Taylor & Francis Group for their kind permission to reproduce these this material.