This book would not have been possible without my numerous friends and colleagues in Central Asia, who through many years generously shared with me their invaluable insights on the region and connected me with leading articulators and practitioners of Central Asian Islam. My special thanks are due to Zhulduzbek Abylkhozhin, Bakhtiyar Babadzhanov, Zuhra Halimova, Ashirbek Muminov, Nargis Nurulla-Khodzhaeva, Zumrat Salmorbekova, Suhrat Sirozhiddinov, Anara Tabyshalieva and Zaur Zhalilov. I am especially grateful to Svetlana Zhanabayeva who 'co-opted' me into her wonderful extended family and greatly facilitated my access to and interaction with Kazakh Sufis and other representatives of Kazakh Islam. I am indebted to many of my other contacts in the region who for obvious reasons I cannot name. I am grateful to Carole Hillenbrand for being the first encouraging external reader of my typescript and to the anonymous reviewer of the book's first draft for constructive and improving comments and suggestions. I also want to thank the United Nations Publication Board for permitting me to reproduce the UN map of Central Asia. At Edinburgh University Press I would also like to thank Ellie Bush and Kirsty Woods for their helpful editorial assistance. My particular thanks, however, goes to Nicola Ramsey, who first approached me with the idea of writing this book, and has been terrific through the whole writing journey. I would also like to make special mention of my children Misha, Alex and Katya for counterbalancing my preoccupation with the book and to thank Alex in particular for his assistance with formatting the typescript and sorting out its endnotes. Above all, I thank my husband Brian for being my rock and my most critical reader and editor. I dedicate this book to him.
