

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to thank the A. S. Onassis Public Benefit Foundation for the award of a four-year scholarship to pursue this research (2003–7); Professor David Bradby at Royal Holloway University of London for his supervision and for encouraging me to pursue this research, that was initiated in 1999 during the MA Text and Performance Studies at Kings College University of London in conjunction with RADA Royal Academy of Dramatic Art; Professors Dr David Cunningham, Christa-Maria Lerm Hayes, Jen Harvie, Olga Taxidou, Adrian Heathfield, Joe Kelleher, Dr Sophie Nield, Dr Mischa Twitchin, and the anonymous reviewers for their precious feedback; Professor Leonee Ormond for her exceptional kindness and generosity and Professor Katherine Worth, leading authority on Beckett; Professor RoseLee Goldberg for selecting me as the inaugural Andrew W. Mellon Curatorial Fellow at Performa Biennial in New York, and for her trust, long-lasting inspiration, personal vision and insight for the future of interdisciplinary arts; Professors Helen Spackman, Anna Furse and Stella Sandford for the initial stimuli; all my collaborators for their trust; my friends, family and Gerasimos for their solid love and support. And most importantly Beckett and the conspirator(s) for letting me conspire.