

Acknowledgements

I would like to write a few words of thanks to my colleagues, friends, and students who have been involved in the project of writing this book. First of all, I need to thank Heinz Giegerich, general editor of the ETOTEL series, for giving me the opportunity to write a textbook on Construction Grammar. Through the writing process, I discovered that I only half-knew a couple of things that I thought I did know, so at least one reader of this book has learned something from it. I also want to thank Graeme Trousdale, who read the entire manuscript and provided critical comments, and two not-so-anonymous referees, who commented on the book proposal. A big round of thanks goes to Florian Dolberg and his students at the University of Mainz for testing out the manuscript and pointing me towards issues that needed clarification. By the same token, my own students at the universities of Freiburg, Zurich, and Neuchâtel have offered their critical feedback. Thank you all! Finally, I would also like to express my gratitude towards the researchers whose ideas form the backbone of this book.
