

Acknowledgements

This book began in work of Phase 2 of the Arts and Humanities Research Council (AHRC) Centre for Irish and Scottish Studies at the University of Aberdeen in the period between 2005 and 2010, and, in particular, from two conferences held in 2007 and 2009 in Aberdeen and in Trinity College Dublin on the theme of 'The Arts, Culture and the Wealth of the Nations'. By accident these dates straddled the financial crisis of 2008 and, as result, provided very different perspectives on the issues that were addressed, as can be seen in the issue of the Journal of Irish and Studies, Vol. 2:2 (Spring 2009) in which some of the papers are collected. My thanks to the AHRC for their support for those and many other events during Phase 2 of the Centre. Some of the research which underpins these chapters was published during and after the lifetime of the AHRC Centre: Chapter 1 draws on my contributions to Liam McIlvanney and Ray Ryan (eds), Ireland and Scotland: Culture and Society 1700–2000 (2005) and on my contribution to John Mackenzie and T. M. Devine (eds), Scotland and the British Empire (2011); Chapter 2 draws on my contribution to The Journal of Scottish Thought, Vol. 2:1 (2009), Race, Scripture and Science; Chapter 3 had its origins in my contribution to Jonathan Murray, Fidelma Farley and Rod Stoneman (eds), The Scottish Cinema Now (2009); Chapter 4 synthesises some central concerns in my recent writing on modern Scottish literature. I would like to thank those editors whose commissions helped stimulate some of its ideas – Matt McGuire, Colin Nicholson, Gerrard Caruthers, Liam McIlvanney, Alan Riach, Ian Brown and Caroline McCracken-Flesher. The final chapter draws on a paper I gave at the conference of the Société des Anglicistes de l'Enseignement Supérieur at Toulon in June 2015 and which was subsequently published in the Observatoire de la Société Britannique (No. 18, février 2016) – my thanks to Gilles Leydier for the invitation.

More general thanks are owed to my colleagues in the Research Institute of Irish and Scottish Studies and in the School of Language, Literature, Music and Visual Culture at the University of Aberdeen, who have provided such a stimulating environment in which to work over the last decade – if I mention Michael Brown, Catherine Jones, Ali Lumsden and Tim Baker it is only because their research and publications have most closely intersected with my own.

My thanks, as always, go to Linda and Conan, who have travelled with these chapters over several years.

Cairns Craig

