

Notes on the Contributors

Margaret Arnott is professor of public policy at the University of the West of Scotland. She has published widely on UK territorial politics and governance. In 2016 she was awarded a House of Commons Fellowship to research 'The Future of the UK Parliament and Devolution'.

Lynn Bennie is reader in politics at the University of Aberdeen. Her research interests span the areas of democratic participation, elections, political parties and green politics; she has published books and articles on all these themes. Her latest book, with Rob Johns and James Mitchell, explores the exceptional party membership surges which followed the 2014 referendum on Scottish independence. The Revival of Party Membership: The Scottish Referendum and Recruitment to Parties will be published later in 2019.

Marco G. Biagi was MSP for Edinburgh from 2011 to 2016, latterly serving as Minister for Local Government and Community Empowerment. He stood down to return to academic research and is currently completing a PhD in comparative politics from Yale University.

Alan Convery is lecturer in politics at the University of Edinburgh. He researches Scottish and British politics and his first book is The Territorial Conservative Party (2016).

Torcuil Crichton is the Daily Record's Westminster editor and a journalistic veteran of six UK general election campaigns, five Scottish elections and several political mishaps along the way. He has worked for the West Highland Free Press, the Herald and was on the Sunday Herald launch team, reporting from across the globe. Formerly a BBC TV producer, he remains a regular television and radio commentator in Gaelic and English, and was the 2017 Scottish political journalist of the year.

Sir John Curtice is professor of politics at Strathclyde University and senior research fellow, NatCen/ScotCen Social Research. He has written extensively about voting behaviour and electoral systems both across the UK as a whole and in Scotland in particular. He has been a co-editor of NatCen/ScotCen's annual British/Scottish Social Attitudes series for over 20 years, and is a regular contributor to British and international media coverage of politics in the UK. Curtice is chief commentator at whatscotlandthinks.org, which provides a comprehensive collection of materials on public attitudes towards how Scotland should be governed and on electoral politics in Scotland.

Zoe Ferguson is an associate with the Carnegie UK Trust and has been developing their work on kindness. She has 20 years' experience in public policy in Scotland in roles spanning research, analysis and policy, including as the chief social researcher at the Scottish Government. She has worked across a wide range of policy areas including education, lifelong learning, work, regeneration, economic development, culture and public service reform. She is a trustee of Cornerstone, a charity providing social care and support services across Scotland.

Murdo Fraser is MSP for Mid Scotland and Fife and was deputy leader of the Scottish Conservative and Unionist Party from 2005 to 2011.

Jim Gallagher's 35-year civil service career included heading the Scottish Justice department, being private secretary to two Secretaries of State for Scotland, and twice serving in the No. 10

Policy Unit under different Prime Ministers. He is now a part-time academic, and a company director in the private and voluntary sectors. He is a member of Nuffield College, Oxford and holds visiting and honorary professorships in the universities of Glasgow and St Andrews. His main academic interests are in the UK's territorial constitution and its financing.

Ewan Gibbs lectures in sociology and social policy at the University of the West of Scotland and sits on the committee of the Scottish Labour History Society. Ewan completed a PhD studying deindustrialisation in the Scottish coalfields in 2016. He has published on 'left-wing' Scottish nationalism, the poll tax non-payment campaign, industrial policy, labour-market restructuring and the memory and legacy of heavy industry.

Ambrose Gillick is a designer and lecturer in architecture at Kent School of Architecture. He researched and taught at Glasgow School of Art between 2011 and 2018 and is a director of Baxendale.

David Gow celebrated his 'golden anniversary' as a journalist in 2018, having joined The Scotsman as a graduate trainee in September 1968 after taking degrees in French and German at Oxford/London universities. He contributed to the first Red Paper on Scotland (1975) and was an editorial adviser for Scottish International. He was Scotland's first full-time EU correspondent 1976–8 and, later, The Guardian's German correspondent (1989–95) and European business editor (2004–9, 2011–12) based in Brussels. He is now editor of Social Europe and of sceptical.scot. He lives in Edinburgh and Aumelas, a village in the Hérault, France.

Gerry Hassan is research fellow in contemporary history at Dundee University. He has previously been a research fellow at the University of the West of Scotland and IPPR Scotland and has written and edited over two dozen books on Scottish and British politics including The Strange Death of Labour Scotland (with Eric Shaw, 2012, Edinburgh University Press), Caledonian Dreaming: The Quest for a Different Scotland (2014), Independence of the Scottish Mind: Elite Narratives, Public Spaces and the Making of a Modern Nation (2014), Scotland the Bold: How Our Nation Changed and Why there is No Going Back (2016), SNP Leaders (edited with James Mitchell, 2016) and A Nation Changed? The SNP and Scotland Ten Years On (2017).

Ailsa Henderson is professor of political science at the University of Edinburgh where she conducts research on comparative sub-state political behaviour and political culture.

Kirsty Hughes is director of the Scottish Centre on European Relations. She is a researcher, writer and commentator on European politics and policy. She has worked at a number of leading European think tanks including as senior fellow at Friends of Europe, Brussels; senior fellow, Centre for European Policy Studies; director, European Programme, Chatham House; senior fellow, Policy Studies Institute; and research fellow, WZB Berlin Social Science Centre. She has published extensively, including books, reports, and policy papers, as well as contributing to a wide range of national and international media outlets. Her research focus has included the UK, Scotland and Brexit, EU democracy, the politics of the Eurozone crisis, the EU enlargement to central and eastern Europe, and Turkey's EU accession process.

Lee Ivett is an award-winning architect, designer and founding director of Baxendale Studio. His work uses creative interventions to engage people and places in useful and transformative ways. Lee is a design tutor at the Mackintosh School of Architecture and a contributor to The Architectural Review, Architects Journal, Metropolis Magazine and RIBA Journal.

Richard Kerley is Emeritus Professor of Management at Queen Margaret University, Edinburgh, and co-chair of the Centre for Scottish Public Policy. He is currently researching elected roles in sub-state governments across a number of countries.

Colin Kidd is Wardlaw Professor of Modern History at the University of St Andrews. He is a Fellow of both the British Academy and the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He is the author of five books, including Subverting Scotland's Past (1993) and Union and Unionisms (2008). He has also co-edited, with Gerry Carruthers, Literature and Union: Scottish Texts, British Contexts (2018). In addition, he is a regular contributor to the London Review of Books and The Guardian.

Johann Lamont is Labour MSP for Glasgow and was previously leader of the Scottish Labour Party.

Craig McAngus is a lecturer in politics at the University of the West of Scotland. He was previously a lecturer at the University of Aberdeen and a research fellow at the University of Aberdeen. He has previously published on the organisational development and strategy of the SNP. His current research focuses on the impact of Brexit on UK fisheries policy.

Neil McGarvey is a senior teaching fellow in the School of Government and Public Policy at the University of Strathclyde, Glasgow. He is the co-author (with Paul Cairney) of Scottish Politics (2008, 2013, new edition in draft). He has published widely in the fields of Scottish politics, local government and public administration.

Joyce McMillan is a freelance writer based in Edinburgh, and a critic and columnist for The Scotsman. She is currently president of Scottish Environment Link. In the 1990s, she co-convened the Scottish Constitutional Convention's Commission on 'wicked issues', including gender balance, and the voting system for the Scottish Parliament; and in 1997–9 she served as a member of the Scottish Office Consultative Steering Group, set up to advise on the structure and procedures of the new Parliament.

Emily St Denny is a lecturer in politics and public policy at the University of Stirling. Her research focuses on policymaking and public-sector reform in the devolved UK. She is a fellow of the Centre on Constitutional Change and has previously worked as a policy researcher at the Public Policy Institute for Wales, based at Cardiff University. Her areas of expertise include health and criminal justice policy, policy divergence in the UK, and the evolution of devolved institutions in Scotland and Wales. Her current research explores the emergence of the 'prevention' agenda in Scotland as a lens through which to assess claims of the advent of a putatively 'Scottish approach' to policymaking.

Mark Shephard is a senior lecturer at the School of Government at Strathclyde University. He has broad interests in Scottish and British politics, legislatures, media, campaigns, youth politics, elite and public opinion and behaviours, particularly legislative impact on opinions and behaviours that are less than optimal both in parliaments and on social media. He has published in a myriad of books and academic journals and has delivered two TED Talks.

Klaus Stolz is chair of British/American Cultural/Social Studies at Chemnitz University of Technology, Germany.

David Torrance was for many years a freelance journalist, writer and broadcaster, as well as the author or editor of more than a dozen books on Scottish politics; since 2018 he has kept his opinions to himself as a researcher at the House of Commons Library.