

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

Alan Convery is senior lecturer in politics at the University of Edinburgh. He is the author of The Territorial Conservative Party: Devolution and Party Change in Scotland and Wales (2016) and is the lead editor of the British Journal of Politics and International Relations.

Mark Diffley is a social researcher, political pollster and consultant based in Edinburgh. He worked as Director of Ipsos MORI Scotland for ten years before launching his own company, Mark Diffley Consultancy and Research, in 2017. During his career, Mark has worked with and advised parties and campaigns from across the political divide, notably leading the UK Government's polling during the 2014 independence referendum and, currently, advising Progress Scotland on its polling and research activity.

Jonathan Evershed is a postdoctoral research fellow at University College Cork, where he works on the Economic and Social Research Council project 'Between Two Unions: The Constitutional Future of the Islands after Brexit'. He specialises in the study of the politics and culture of Unionism and Loyalism in Northern Ireland and his first monograph, Ghosts of the Somme: Commemoration and Culture War in Northern Ireland, was published in 2018.

Paris Gourtsoyannis has been Westminster correspondent of the Scotsman since 2016, covering the aftermath of the EU referendum and the 2017 general election. Prior to that, he worked on the Scottish edition of The Times, the Edinburgh Evening News and Holyrood magazine, where his first assignment was Ruth Davidson's leadership campaign launch in 2011. He graduated from the University of Edinburgh in 2010.

Dr Gerry Hassan is a writer, commentator and Senior Research Fellow at Dundee University. He has written and edited more than two dozen books on Scotland, the UK, social change and the future of society, politics and ideas. His most recent publications include The People's Flag and the Union Jack: An Alternative History of Britain and the Labour Party as well as the collections Scotland the Brave? Twenty Years of Change and the Future of the Nation and The Story of the Scottish Parliament: The First Two Decades Explained.

Richard Hayton is associate professor of politics at the University of Leeds. He has published widely on British politics and the Conservative Party, and is founding editor of the New Perspectives on the Right book series hosted by Manchester University Press.

Chrysa Lamprinakou is a research associate at the University of Strathclyde. She was previously a postdoctoral researcher at the Parliamentary Candidates UK (PCUK) research programme, hosted by University College London and Birkbeck, University of London. She has also taught at University College London and Brunel University. Her research and teaching areas are British politics, elections, candidates and elected officials.

Murray Stewart Leith is Professor of Political Science at the University of the West of Scotland. He researches national identity, nationalism and politics and lectures widely on Scotland, the broader United Kingdom and the United States. His most recent works focus on the nature and identity of Scots both at home and abroad and the evolving diaspora policy of the Scottish Government. His latest co-authored work, Scotland: The New State of an Old Nation, will be published in 2020.

Neil McGarvey is a senior teaching fellow in the School of Government and Public Policy at the University of Strathclyde, Glasgow. He is the co-author (with Paul Cairney) of Scottish Politics (2008, 2013, new edition in draft) and has published widely in the fields of Scottish politics, local government and public administration.

David Patrick works as a postdoctoral research fellow with the International Studies Group (University of the Free State, South Africa). He was awarded his PhD in history from the University of Sheffield in 2013, and his first monograph, Reporting Genocide: Media, Mass Violence and Human Rights, was published in 2018. His current research interests include media coverage of the 2014 independence referendum and sociological components related to professional boxing in the twentieth century.

Anthony Salamone is Managing Director of European Merchants, the Scottish political insight firm which he founded in Edinburgh. A political scientist and analyst, his interests focus on EU politics and institutions, Scottish politics, British politics and international relations. He has degrees from the University of Edinburgh and the London School of Economics, and is completing a PhD in British and European politics at Edinburgh. He is a Member of the Edinburgh Europa Institute.

Jennifer Thomson is a lecturer in comparative politics at the University of Bath. She is the author of Political Institutions and Abortion Law: Explaining Policy Resistance (2018) which looks at the case study of abortion law in Northern Ireland. She has published many articles in journals including International Studies Review, International Political Science Review and the British Journal of Politics and International Relations.

Lauren Toner graduated from the University of Strathclyde with a dissertation on the Scottish Conservative Party. She is currently an MSc student of political research, an undergraduate tutor and will begin her PhD in 2020. Her previous employment includes both the private and public sector, most recently at the Scottish Parliament.

David Torrance was for many years a freelance journalist, writer and broadcaster, as well as author or editor of more than a dozen books on Scottish politics. Since 2018, he has kept his opinions to himself as a constitutional researcher at the House of Commons Library.