

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I thank Gillian Leslie at Edinburgh University Press for such genuine enthusiasm for this project and for shepherding the book along. Richard Strachan and Sam Johnson, also at EUP, for swift and faultless help to the author whenever needed. Series editors Linda Badley and R. Barton Palmer for encouraging this book to become a part of Traditions in World Cinema. I am grateful for the opportunity that you all have given me.

I am indebted to Gunnar Iversen for steering me into the field of Norwegian horror many years ago, and for sticking with me ever since. If I ‘keep cool’ just a fraction of how well you do it, I will consider myself well taught.

Rikke Schubart for reading and discussing drafts of the book along the way. Your insight and passion have been invaluable, and our talks are always a highlight of my day.

Anne Gjelsvik for always being supportive of my research, my ideas, and my teaching. If you only knew how often I hear your voice in my head: ‘Baby steps.’

Friends, colleagues and students at the Department of Art and Media Studies, NTNU.

Luis Rocha Antuñes and Lorna Piatti-Farnell for generous input, inspiration and direction at various points of my research into Norwegian horror.

Jakub Sebastian Konefal at the University of Gdansk and Panoptikum for providing the first opportunity to publish my research in English, in their issue 17 on Nordic film and television (see Andresen 2017a). The Journal of Scandinavian Cinema for allowing me to explore some of my ideas, in their volume 7 issue 3 and volume 9 issue 2 (see Andresen 2017b and 2019). Also, Karsten Meinich and Lars Ole Kristiansen at Montages.no for letting me have a critical go at a varied selection of popular, and less popular, Norwegian movies upon their release.

Trond-Atle Farestveit for a steady eye and calm hand in correcting and editing my text, and for constructive content discussions to go with it.

Sven Østgaard for essential help with the technicalities of the screenshot.

The filmmakers who gave generously of their time to discuss their genre work during my research: Pål Øie, Roar Uthaug, Martin Sundland, Pål Sletaune, Astrid Thorvaldsen and Eskil Vogt. Also, Joachim Trier for the uplifting residence visit to our department at NTNU in 2017, and Severin Eskeland for uncompromising dedication to horror genre filmmaking.

First and last, my wife Line Solberg Ohnstad for patience and support.
