

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Various parts of the research for this study were made possible through financial support from Fulbright-Hays (the US Department of Education), the Fulbright Program of USIA through the West African Research Association/Center, the Wenner-Gren Foundation for Anthropological Research, and Northwestern University. The NIMH Program on Culture and Mental Health Behavior, the Committee on Human Development, the University of Chicago, and the National Science Foundation-NATO provided funds in the form of postdoctoral fellowships for the writing. A term of paid leave from the University of Sussex allowed me to work on revisions of the manuscript.

I am grateful to the Institut des Sciences Humaines in Bamako and the USIS staff of the US Embassy in Bamako for facilitating my research in Mali. Many individuals in West Africa and especially in Nioro du Sahel helped make the research possible. While it is not possible to thank them all individually, I want to express my deepest gratitude to Nioro's most eminent religious leaders (in alphabetical order): the late Sadikou Diakité, Mohamédou Ould Cheikh Hamallah, and Tierno Hady Tall. I am also deeply indebted to the late Sidy Modibo Kane of Dilly. At the risk of oversight, I have decided not to single out the countless others who helped me during fieldwork in Nioro and beyond with the following exceptions: Mohamed Aliou Sow, Mamadou Diarra, M'Péné Diarra, and Modibo Tiambel Guimbayara. Much of what follows is only possible because of their help, guidance, friendship and good humour.

This study began as a PhD dissertation at Northwestern University, which proved to be a most welcoming place for me to pursue my interests in anthropology, history, Islam and Africa. I owe the greatest of debts to Robert Launay, the chair of my dissertation committee, for his advice, encouragement and support. I would also like to thank my teachers, Karen Tranberg Hansen, John O. Hunwick, David William Cohen, Brinkley Messick, Richard Parmentier and Judith Irvine, whose ideas have influenced what follows. This book in its present form took shape and was rewritten as I have moved from Chicago to Paris, then back to Chicago, before moving to Brighton, England, and now to the Netherlands where I completed the final revisions at the African Studies Centre.

Some of the many people who have helped along the way include: the late Moustapha Kane, Abdoulaye Sall, and Oumar Watt in Dakar; Jean-Loup Amselle, Corinne Fortier, Constant Hamès, Danièle Hervieu-Léger, Ibrahima-Abou Sall, Jean Schmitz and Jean-Louis Triaud in France; Salman Tamboura, Moussa Djiré, Isaie Dognon and Shaka Bagayoko in Bamako; and Louis Brenner, Bertram Cohler, Mamadou Diawara, Micaela di Leonardo, James Fairhead, Jane Goodman, Hudita Mustafa, Maria Grosz-Ngaté, Jane Guyer, Rosalind Hackett, John Hanson, Gil Herdt, Abdullahi Ali Ibrahim, Gregory Mann, Adeline Masquelier, Caroline Osella, Filippo Osella, Richard Roberts, Armando Salvatore, Boukary Savadogo, Rüdiger Seesemann, Rebecca Shereikis, Richard Shweder, Rosalind Shaw, Eric Silla, Mette Shayne, Diana Stone, Niels Teunis and Theo van der Meer. Ralph Austen, Jean Comaroff, Hudita Mustafa, Armando Salvatore, Rüdiger Seesemann, and Rebecca Shereikis all read and commented on various chapters or parts of chapters, sometimes at short notice, and for this I am grateful. I owe special thanks to Murray Last for the idea of the prayer economy that I have developed here.

I am also pleased to be able to thank a most generous group of readers, who reviewed the book. John Bowen, one of the reviewers of the first draft, provided excellent advice on how to revise the manuscript, as well as words of encouragement. The subsequent reviewers for the International African Institute (IAI), Louis Brenner, David Robinson and the editor, John Peel, offered much constructive criticism, which I have tried to incorporate into this final version. The usual disclaimers apply.

I would like to thank my mother, as well as a group of friends, Zeynep Erim, Jacalyn Harden, Elise Levin, John Maguire and William Mar, who have been there throughout a project that has taken much longer to complete than expected. Above all, I thank John Edward Harrelson.

Some of the material in Chapter 3 appeared as ‘Notes on the Tijaniyya Hamawiyya in Nioro du Sahel after the second exile of its shaykh’ in J.-L. Triaud and D. Robinson (eds), La Tijâniyya, Paris: Karthala, 2000, pp. 357–65, and is used here with the permission of Karthala; parts of Chapter 6 appeared as ‘Muslim saints in the age of neoliberalism’ in Brad Weiss (ed.), Producing African Futures: Ritual and Reproduction in a Neoliberal Age, Leiden: Brill, 2004, pp. 79–105, and are used here with the permission of Brill; and portions of Chapter 8 and several passages in the Conclusion appeared in ‘Islam and public piety in Mali’ in A. Salvatore and D. F. Eickelman (eds), Public Islam and the Common Good, Leiden: Brill, 2004, pp. 205–26, and are used here with the permission of Brill.
