

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The field research on which this book is based was carried out in the Republic of Sudan between 1982 and 1994. It was made possible by a generous grant from SAREC (Swedish Agency for Research Co-operation with Developing Countries). I gratefully acknowledge this support.

I am indebted to a great number of people for their assistance and wish to thank them all, but I can, alas, only mention a few names here. It was Professors Gudrun Dahl and Anders Hjort af Ornäs who first suggested West African pilgrims as a suitable research topic for my Ph.D. thesis. I have benefited from this foresight and thank them. This book is a revised version of my thesis, which was presented to the University of Stockholm in 1990.

Early encouragement and suggestions in formulating and elaborating the research topic came from Professor Ulf Hannerz, A. H. M. Kirk-Greene, Dr Paul Baxter, Dr G. A. Balamoan and Professor J. Zwennermann. Such early direction proved invaluable.

Thanks are due to Professor Gudrun Dahl, the academic supervisor for my Ph.D. dissertation, for being by turn a hanging judge, a benign judge, but always a meticulous critic in her striving for consistency and clarity; and to Professor David Parkin who, having taught me anthropology ten years earlier, now consented to become the customary public examiner of my Ph.D. thesis. Issues and questions he raised during this public examination turned out to be invaluable, marking stones for me when it came to revising the manuscript for publication.

Many of my former teachers, now colleagues and friends, have also contributed to the development of the central arguments of the book, and aided my revision of the manuscript. Dr Susan Drunker-Brown, Professor Bruce Kapferer, Professor Sandy Robertson, Dr Ulla Wagner and Professor Sandra Wallman were always generous critics who read and commented on various versions of my chapters, enabling me to improve and, on occasion, immunise my arguments against potential assailants. I am most grateful to them for this.

The task of revising the manuscript was carried out at IHCAR, Department of International Health Care Research, the Karolinska Institute, Sweden, where I had been appointed to a research fellowship. I wish to pay tribute to Professor Göran Sterky and the whole of IHCAR for a very stimulating and congenial atmosphere of inter-disciplinary discourse, where no taken-for-granted assumption of another's discipline escapes assault, but requires a justifying and convincing argument in order to be accepted.

Chapter 2, on the historical background to the migration of West Africans to Sudan, has improved a lot as a result of the keen interest of Dr Murray Last, who made invaluable corrections to many an inaccurate assertion, and introduced me to the complex field of modern Nigerian historiography, with its contesting interpretations on the causes and consequences of the region's Islamic revolutions of the past century. I cannot thank him enough. A version of Chapter 6 was read at the 6th Colloquium on African Religion and Ritual at Satterthwaite. I am indebted to Professor Richard Werbner and members of that colloquium for many useful comments which improved my revision of the chapter.

Thanks are also due to some anonymous readers who reviewed the book for the IAI, for correcting my scholarship and suggesting ways of improving the book.

In Sudan I was affiliated to the University of Gezira, Wad Medani. I am indebted to the members of the department of Rural Development for their warm hospitality. Particularly, I wish to thank Dr Khalid Hagar, Professor Robin Mills and his wife Helen, Mr Sid Ahmed Khedin and Mr Rashad Mohammed for making my fieldwork a memorable experience.

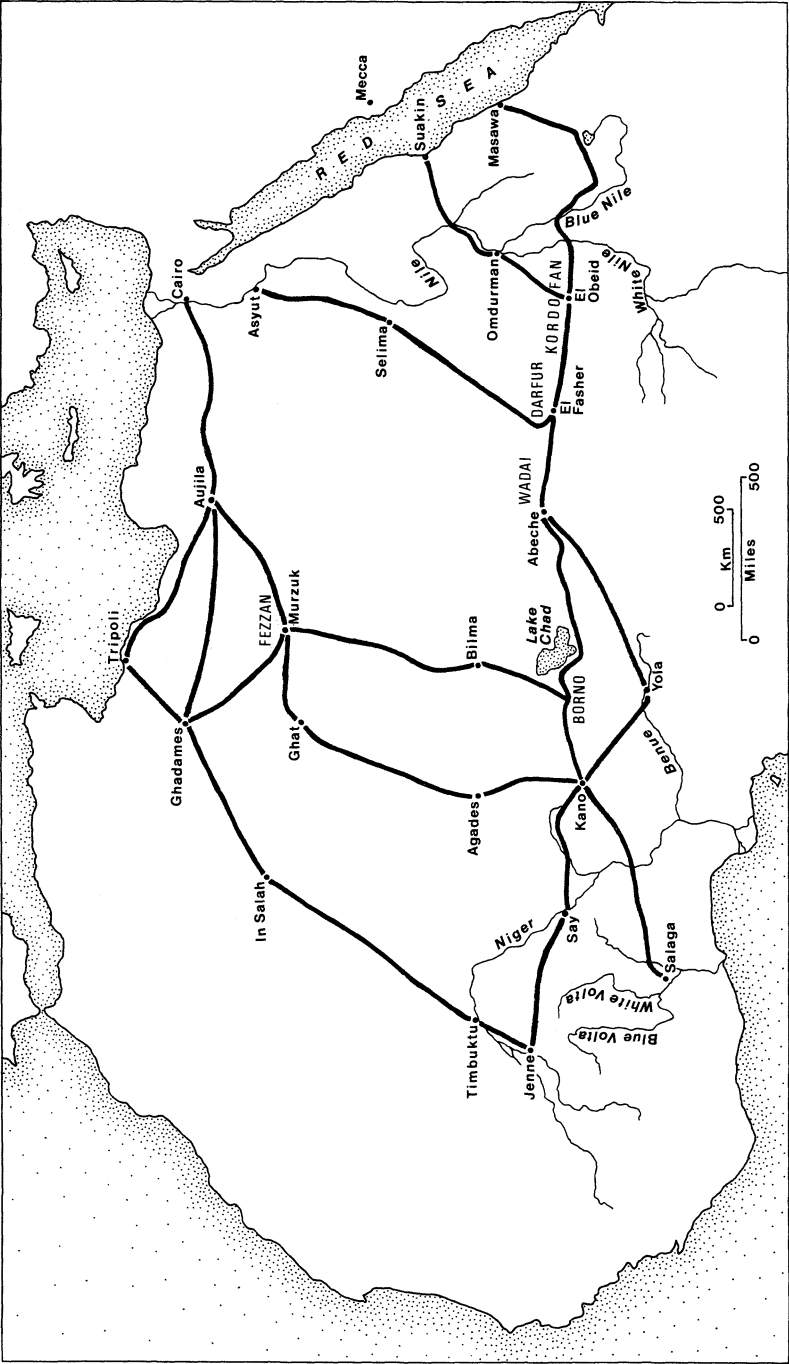

The staff of the Oriental Library, Durham, gave me invaluable help when I spent time there going through the Sudan Archive. My research in Stockholm would not have progressed smoothly had I not had access to the library of Folkens Museum, and the assistance of Ms D. Fröland, the librarian, who was ever willing to help me secure books from other libraries.

To my West African brothers and sisters in Sudan, without whom this book would not have been possible, I owe the greatest of debts. Specifically, Dr Ibrahim Mohammed Ibrahim, Sheikh Hajj Radwan, Haj Ishamael Me Goro, and many other malams who devoted countless hours of their valuable time to me, explaining what the pilgrimage meant to them, and interpreting their understanding of the Holy Quran.

With such great support, one would expect this book to contain less shortcomings than it does. The imperfections that remain must be attributed to the fact that I have somehow sought to retain my own stamp on the text. I alone, therefore, am responsible for any deficiencies that remain.

Finally, my greatest gratitude is to Kicki, who nursed our two boys while I was in the field and took care of our little Emily while I grappled with the writing of this book.
