

Acknowledgements

Before setting out on my investigation, I would like to acknowledge those who have contributed to this project. As ever, I thank Natalie Scoles for pointing me in the direction I was already going, helping convince me it was time to write a study on Agamben (at a time when I imagined I was carrying out my systematic study for my own personal edification and nothing more) and pushing me to apply for funding to meet with him. I am grateful to North Central College for providing a summer research grant to facilitate that visit and to Giorgio for taking the time to reflect with me on the development of his thought. I also had the opportunity to share my preliminary findings at seminars in Toronto (hosted by York University Communication Program and Ryerson University Faculty of Communication and Design) and Prague (hosted by the Faculty of Protestant Theology, Charles University). I would like to thank Virgil Brower and František Štěch for their invitation to Prague and Philippe Theophanidis for his invitation to Toronto and all the participants at both events for their engagement and feedback (especially Kim Berkey, who provided a formal response to my paper in Prague). André Dias provided crucial bibliographical guidance, and both Marika Rose and Colby Dickinson read drafts and provided valuable comments, for which I am grateful. Finally, I would like to thank my two anonymous reviewers, along with Carol Macdonald, Tim Clark, and the rest of the editorial and support staff at Edinburgh University Press.
