

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

My first debt is to my numerous informants, for without their cooperation and patience, this book could never have been written. Many took time off from busy schedules to see me at short notice. I remember my all too brief encounter with the late Faluso Longe, whose infectious enthusiasm for the subject, spurred me on and gave me some initial confidence. I am also grateful to the following, who gave me advice and logistical support in Nigeria: Professor Adebayo Adedeji, Mrs Kehinde Adekoya, Yakubu Aliyu, late Chief Samuel Asabia, Chief Joop Berkhout, Dr Sam Chukwujekwu, Chris Enenya, Chief Chuks Ikokwu, Chief Augustine Ilodibe, Chief Onwuka Kalu, Chief Arthur Mbanefo, Alhaji Aliko Mohammed, Michael Murray-Bruce, 'Bayo Olukoshi, Jean-Claude Tétégau, Chief Jerome Udoji and Chief Raymond Zard. I owe special debts to Alhaji Mohammed Koguna, whose role went far beyond that of informant, and to Freddie Scott, who helped me regain composure at a vital moment, when further work seemed impossible.

Professor Asiwaju of the History Department, University of Lagos, welcomed me and made formal arrangements for a longer visit. Nina Mba, in the same department, guided me to a literature I was ignorant of. I recall, too, the sound advice of that mercurial spirit of financial journalism, Ashikiwe Adione-Egom. I received invaluable help from two taxi drivers, Musibau Akinola and Marcus Iwu, in Lagos and Aba respectively. Their extensive knowledge of these cities, patience and good humour, allowed me to locate enterprises and kept me on time for appointments, on repeated visits to Nigeria.

In lieu of an academic office, much of this book was generated in libraries and cafés. I acknowledge the great assistance I have received from staff at the Queen Elizabeth House Library and the Rhodes House Library in Oxford. Thanks also to the proprietors of the Cafe Ariel in Berkeley, and the St Giles Cafe at Oxford, for space and forbearance. Appropriately, it was in California that I found computer sockets for use by café clientele and a congenial atmosphere in which to finish my writing.

A number of individuals made detailed comments on my work. I thank them and take full responsibility for the final product. Sara Berry read an early paper and encouraged me to extend it. Paul Kennedy criticised a draft of the book and made many positive suggestions. Later, Gareth Austin, George Deutsch, Tony Hopkins and Susan Martin read all, or part, of the manuscript. Mallam Abdulkarim Dan-Asabe shared with me his knowledge of the business class in Kano and made many suggestions. Tony Berrett, Patrick Smith and Richard Synge were a great source of encouragement throughout this project. Finally, I acknowledge the assistance of Tabitha Kanogo, with whom I conducted some early interviews in Onitsha and Nnewi. Without her understanding and support, this book would never have materialised.
