

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

WE WOULD LIKE TO THANK our brilliant contributors, whose insights into the connections between media and logistics have driven this project. Several of our contributors presented at the Supply and Command conference at New York University in 2018, and we would like to thank both the participants and our co-organizers for their work to develop this emerging area of media studies. In developing this collection, we have built not only on their contributions but on the groundbreaking research of scholars of media and logistics who continue to inspire us. And, most importantly, we would like to thank Courtney Berger, Sandra Korn, and the editorial team at Duke University Press, whose careful and creative logistical labor has made this book possible.

Nicole would like to thank Matt and Susan for being fantastic coeditors, and she extends thanks to her colleagues and students at New York University, especially Isra Ali, Arjun Appadurai, Finn Brunton, Alex Galloway, Lisa Gitelman, Erica Robles-Anderson, Natasha Schüll, and Helga Tawil-Souri for conversations that shaped this text over the past several years. Nicole is grateful for the members of the INFRA research group, especially Ian Alexander, Neta Alexander, Mei Ling Chua, Rodrigo Ferreira, Marcha Johnson, Sam Kellogg, Harris Kornstein, Ayesha Omer, Anne Pasek, Colette Perold, and Rory Solomon, whose exchanges informed the early development of this book. Nicole would also like to thank Simon Stern for the invitation to present an iteration of this material at the Grafstein Lecture at the University of Toronto; and Scott Lash and Sophie Haines for the invitation to think through logistics at Oxford in 2020. Last, special thanks to Jamie Skye Bianco, Shannon Mattern, and Lisa Parks for the many logistical visions that shaped this book.

Susan would like to thank Nicole and Matt for being such wonderful co-editors, and she would like to thank the interlocutors currently and formerly in the English Department at UC Riverside, especially Fred Moten, Jennifer Doyle, and Sherryl Vint; colleagues at the Max Planck Institute for the History of Science, especially Jennifer Derr, Wilko Graf von Hardenberg, Mike Pettit, and Lukas Rieppel; colleagues at the Institute for Culture and Society at Western Sydney University, especially Ned Rossiter, Brett Neilson, and Tony Bennett; the Department of Language and Literature at the Norwegian University of Science and Technology, especially Anders Skare Malvik, Frode Lerum Boasson, and Knut Ove Eliassen; and the Department of English at Exeter University, especially John Plunkett and Regenia Gagnier. Thanks also to Tung-Hui Hu and Sina Najafi. For research help and image permissions, thanks go to the staff at the Newport Historical Society, the National Maritime Museum, the London Metropolitan Archives, and the Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture.

Unsurprisingly, Matt would also like to thank Nicole and Susan for being amazing coeditors. He would also like to thank colleagues at New York University and Fordham University, including Lisa Gitelman, Mara Mills, Mary Poovey, Alex Galloway, Ben Kafka, Carlin Wing, Jason LaRivière, Kouross Esmaeli, Kavita Kulkarni, Patrick Davison, Tim Wood, Diana Kamin, Xiaochang Li, Ella Kilk, Yoav Halperin, Jacob Gaboury, and Shari Wolk; at the Internationales Kolleg für Kulturtechnikforschung und Medienphilosophie, especially Bernhard Siegert, Lorenz Engell, Orit Halpern, and Bernd Herzogenrath; and from Supply and Command and the critical logistics community, especially Colette Perold, Ingrid Burrington, Martha Poon, Dara Orenstein, Miriam Posner, Patrick Brodie, Niccolò Cuppini, Guillermo León Gómez, Silvia Lindtner, Juan Llamas-Rodriguez, and Deborah Cowen. Finally, he would like to thank his partner, Jing, and son, Nicholas, whose care has become his most complex logistical operation.