

Acknowledgments

This volume has been far too long in the making. Not only has Shaun Hughes deserved a tribute such as this for many years now, but also, as twenty-first-century academics, our tendency to “burn the candle at both ends” has caused this project to take far longer than should have been the case. And then, things like pandemics happen. The onslaught of COVID-19 brought most of the world to a halt, including work on this volume, as we all pivoted our focus simply to teaching, research, and service as best as possible in the midst of a global pandemic. As time went by and little by little we all adjusted and got back to normal as best we could, the editors inched their way forward on the volume; we now wish to acknowledge the heroic and steadfast efforts of all those who have helped make this tribute possible.

First and foremost, of course, the editors thank Shaun Hughes himself for his ceaseless and invaluable efforts as a mentor, colleague, scholar, and friend; without him this volume would not be possible and the world would be a dimmer place in many respects. The editors would also like to thank the contributors to this volume who have donated their valuable time and their quality scholarship, as well as their patience, to this noble effort. And as far as patience is concerned, many thanks are owed to Ilse Schweitzer, Erin Sweany, and the good people at Medieval Institute Publications / DeGruyter who have stood behind this project despite the countless delays that have slowed its progress to completion. Thanks also goes to Sarah E. Yancey for her diligent proofreading of the essays in their revised versions. Finally, it should be noted that this project was made possible in part by a RISE grant from the University of South Carolina.
