

Acknowledgments

Gaming the Medieval English Text: Sir Gawain and the Green Knight and the Cotton Nero A X/2 Manuscript has been years in the making, accruing many debts of gratitude. This book would not have come to fruition if not for the invaluable work of Sarah Sprouse and Kristen York. Sarah provided us much thoughtful feedback on drafts and essential bibliographical assistance, while Kristen offered vital and careful attention to organizing the manuscript information into the comprehensible frameworks of the appendices. The gifts of their time and expertise can never fully be repaid.

We are also greatly indebted to Susanna Fein, whose enthusiasm for our project emanated from the start. Her patient processing of our proposed ideas over breakfasts at Kalamazoo and crucial advice about attending to the meter of Sir Gawain and the Green Knight helped us understand and articulate more clearly the metrical ties between the romance's long alliterative lines and its bobs. We also thank Betsy McCormick, who first introduced us to cultural game theory and its exciting applications to medieval literature. Betsy's unrelenting encouragement and belief in this project guided us to its successful completion in more ways than we can acknowledge.

Our undergraduate and graduate students through the years have inspired our reading of Sir Gawain and the Green Knight with enlightening discussions and creative interpretative work of their own. In addition to Sarah and Kristen, both former students of Julie's, we want to mention Benjamin Popson for his innovative work with meter, Emma Aylor for her well-crafted work on the exquisite craft of Pearl, Brian Larsen for his research into the editorial history of Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, and Clint Morrison for his enthusiasm and contributions to reading Sir Gawain and the Green Knight in its manuscript context. We also thank Kim's former students, T. J. Josefsen-Lanham, Sarah Daniel, and Edson Badson-Davila, who each discovered new and invigorating ways of approaching the concept of game in Sir Gawain and the Green Knight.

We thank our respective institutions for their financial support. Julie thanks Texas Tech University for funding awarded through the Scholarship Catalyst Program, the TTU College of Arts and Sciences Mid-Career Grant, and the TTU Humanities Center Alumni College Fellowship. She especially thanks Dean Brian Still for his consistent support of her work in his roles as chair and dean. She also is greatly indebted to Geraldine Heng and Tison Pugh, who have offered invaluable support through enthusiastic encouragement and writing in support of her research funding. Kim thanks Sam Houston State University for funding awarded through the Office of Research and Sponsored Programs and the College of Humanities and Social Sciences. She especially thanks Vice Provost Anne Gaillard for supporting extended periods of leave from her administrative duties to work on this book.

We thank the British Library for permission to reprint images from British Library, Cotton MS Nero A X/2 and MS Harley 2253. We wish to single out Julian Harrison, Curator of Pre-1600 Historical Manuscripts, and Christina Duffy, former British Library Imaging Specialist, who allowed us to examine the manuscript and to see the multi-spectral images of its illustrations. We thank Sandra Powelette, the Imaging and Brand Licensing Manager, and Kathryn Taylor in Customer Services, who were invaluable advocates for acquiring the image permissions we needed for our book. We also thank Broadview Press for their permission to reprint a page image from the James Winny edition of Sir Gawain and the Green Knight.

We are grateful to our anonymous MIP reviewers for their comments: our book is stronger for their suggestions. We also thank our MIP editor, Tyler Cloherty, for her patience as we completed the book amidst the COVID-19 pandemic and other obstacles. We are especially grateful to Christine Henschel, our project editor at De Gruyter, and her team, for her enthusiastic support of our project and cover composition. Thanks to Christine for reproducing our images in color! We also owe a special thanks to Erika Gaffney who was the first editor to take an interest in our book.

We acknowledge those who have shaped our research through their ongoing support and dedicated mentorship, including Thomas Hanks, Geoffrey Russom, and Elizabeth Bryan, SunHee Kim Gertz and Bradford Fletcher. These distinguished mentors (and friends) continue to inspire us to question and seek out answers to some of the most delightfully frustrating literary texts of the Middle Ages. Thank you for being our staunchest supporters from the very beginning.

Finally, we thank our colleagues at Texas Tech and Sam Houston State, the staff and students of Sam Houston's Elliott T. Bowers Honors College, our friends, Colleen Brown Only, Marta Kvande, Ryan Hackenbracht, and Julie's Pod Lunch friends, Tracy Bilsing, Carroll Nardone, Grant Weidenfeld, Anne Gaillard, Robert Adams, and Helena Halmari, and, most of all, our families. Robbie and Brent, Collin, Henry Havelok, and Avalon have always been there to take up the slack and commiserate with us as we worked long hours to complete this project. We are ever grateful for all the support shown to us by family and friends, colleagues and mentors. Thanks to all!