Notes on contributors

Natalia Barranco Izquierdo has a PhD in Didactics of Language and Literature and is currently teaching at the School of Education and Social Work of the University of Valladolid, Spain. Her main research interests are methods of teaching and learning English as a foreign language and early acquisition of a foreign language. She has published several papers on mediation as a communication language activity and early foreign language teaching.

Poliana Claudiano Calazans is a High School Language professor and coordinator in the Guarapari, ES, Brazil. She has a PhD in Linguistics from the Federal University of Rio de Janeiro with research on indigenous languages. In 2019, she participated in a training by Capes at Fanshawe College in Canada.

María Teresa Calderón Quindós is Associate Professor of English at the University of Valladolid, teaching General English at the School of Education and Social Work. In 2005 she was awarded by AESLA (Spanish Association of Applied Linguistics) for her work on Cognitive Poetics. Her most relevant work in the field appears in Annual Review of Cognitive Linguistics, John Benjamins (2005). She has also done research in English literature and foreign language education.

Antoinette Camilleri Grima is full professor of applied linguistics at the University of Malta. She teaches language pedagogy and she has published several books and articles in internationally refereed journals on intercultural competence, educational sociolinguistics, learner autonomy and bilingual education. She has authored two radio series in Maltese as a foreign language, and has coordinated a number of Council of Europe workshops in the area of modern languages.

Kyria Rebeca Finardi is a professor in the Department of Languages, Culture and Education (DLCE) and a researcher in the post-graduate programs of Education (PPGE) and Linguistics (PPGEL) of the Federal University of Espirito Santo (UFES). She is also the former President of the Brazilian Association of Applied Linguistics (ALAB).

Martin Guardado is a Professor of applied linguistics and sociolinguistics at the University of Alberta. He obtained his PhD from the University of British Columbia specializing in language education and heritage language socialization. Additional active research includes EAP, TESL, TBLT, interlingual family language policies, and Náhuat Pipil Indigenous language revitalization in El Salvador.

Hiroki Hanamoto holds a PhD in Sociolinguistics awarded by Kansai University, Japan. He is Associate Professor in the Department of Science and Engineering at Tokyo Denki University. He mainly researches issues related to multimodal interaction using interactional resources such as gesture and embodied action in English as a lingua franca (ELF) contexts. He has published articles in international journals and written book chapters in various areas of ELF interactions.

Vita Kalnbērziņa obtained her PhD from Lancaster University, UK. She presently holds an Associate Professor's position at the University of Latvia and works as a curriculum and examination expert at the Ministry of Education and Science of Latvia. Her main interests are language acquisition, language testing and intercultural communication.

Anna Khalizova studied German, English, Spanish languages, literature and pedagogy at Moscow State Linguistic University (MSLU). After graduation, she started her PhD project at Albert-Ludwigs-University in Freiburg, Germany, and she completed it in 2017. She was a DAAD-scholarship holder at the University of Duisburg-Essen. She worked as a research assistant at the University of Freiburg. Presently, she is a research assistant at the University of Koblenz-Landau and Goethe University Frankfurt. Her research interests are multilingualism, intercultural communication, conversation analysis, multimodal analysis, language didactics, German as a second/foreign language.

Asunción Martínez Arbelaiz has been the language coordinator for University Studies Abroad Consortium since 2001, where she designs, administers and assesses different courses of Spanish as an additional language. She also teaches in the European Master in Multilingualism and Education and is part of the research group Elkarrikertuz, both at the University of the Basque Country, Spain.

Vimbai Mbirimi-Hungwe is a lecturer in the Department of Language Proficiency at the Sefako Makgatho University of Health Sciences in South Africa. She has just completed her PhD. Her research focuses on the use of translanguaging, reading comprehension and collaborative learning at the tertiary level. She is an upcoming researcher who has contributed with two book chapters and a few peer-reviewed journal articles.

Isabel Pereira received a PhD in SLA from the University of Illinois at Urbana Champaign, Department of Spanish, Italian and Portuguese, in 1996. She works as Assistant Director of NYU Madrid in charge of the language program, and she teaches Spanish at different levels. Her areas of interest include curricular development and second language research as well as second language acquisition and language pedagogy in study abroad.

Edenize Ponzo Peres, is a professor of the Department of Languages and in the Post Graduate Program of Linguistics (PPGEL) of the Federal University of Espirito Santo, Vitória-ES, Brazil. She is currently pursuing her second PhD with research on indigenous and heritage languages and communities at the Catholic University of Minas Gerais.

Piotr Romanowski holds a PhD in Linguistics. He is Assistant Professor at the Department of Applied Linguistics, the University of Warsaw. His main research interests include bilingual and multilingual education, sociolinguistics, and foreign language teaching and learning. He is the Chief Editor of the Journal of Multilingual Theories and Practices (Equinox Publishing), and the founding member of MultiLingNet. He has authored over forty papers, one monograph and co-edited five other volumes. He has guest lectured in the UK, the USA, Canada, Brazil, Chile, Taiwan, South Africa, New Zealand.

Anna Szczepaniak-Kozak is Associate Professor at the School of Languages and Literatures at Adam Mickiewicz University (AMU) in Poznań, Poland and the Deputy Editor in Chief for Glottodidactica. An International Journal of Applied Linguistics. Anna's main research interests are within the field of applied linguistics, particularly interlanguage pragmatics and teaching-oriented studies of hate speech. She is the author of three books, the co-editor of six monographs, and the author of more than fifty scholarly papers. In years 2014–2016, she conducted research and training activities in a project financed by the European Commission titled RADAR (Regulating Anti-Discrimination and Anti-Racism). In 2019, she received the AMU Rector's award for outstanding academic achievements.