

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I began fieldwork for this project during my years at the Princeton Writing Program and am grateful for funds from the Princeton University Committee on Research in the Humanities and Social Sciences. At New York University, I am grateful for my research budget through the Expository Writing Program.

I am indebted to Angelique Haugerud, Dominic Boyer, and my anonymous reviewers for their insightful feedback on chapter 1; American Ethnologist's Linda Forman for smart editing work and enthusiasm; Sadi and Nader Marhaba for research support; and photographers Roberto Di Cristina, Bruno Cordioli, and Antonio Cardinale for permission to use their work. I am grateful to American Ethnologist for permission to republish significant portions of the article "Trusted Puppets, Tarnished Politicians: Humor and Cynicism in Berlusconi's Italy" here. I am also grateful for permission from the Council on European Studies, publishers of European Politics and Society, for allowing reprinting of my work, "Enchanting the Disenchanted: Grillo's Supernatural Humor as Populist Politics," as well as to Neringa Klumbyte for her smart suggestions and conversation on the piece. I have presented this work over years at numerous conferences, including American Anthropological Association meetings, American Ethnological Society meetings, the Society for Cultural Anthropology, PSI: Performance Studies International, the 2011 Barcelona meetings of the Society for the Anthropology of Europe and Council for European Studies, and a 2018 conference on politics and humor, the “Comedy World Summit,” with special thanks to Morten Nielsen. I have received vital feedback from collaborators and colleagues that has changed and spurred my thinking. All translations from Italian to English are mine.

My family has supported me and made my scholarly life richer and easier: my mother, Maureen Molé, and Marissa and Paul Bostick; Dana and Nick Flynn; Maj. Lane L. Liston Jr. and Caroline Liston; Esther and Stephen Winikoff; my late grandparents, Carmel and Vincent Altomare. I am very grateful to many conversations with my fellow Italianist, dear friend, and brilliant scholar Andrea Muehlebach. I am also grateful for formative and inspiring conversations with fellow scholars of Italy over these years: Betsy Krause, Tracey Heathington, Emanuela Guano, Lilith Mahmud, Jason Pine, Jillian Cavanaugh, Pamela Ballinger, and Stavroula Pipyrou.

I am greatly indebted to artist Simona Conti for use of her painting and the fabulous image of it by friend and photographer Nikki Alcazer. I have been enriched over the years through lively dialogue with Mark Robinson, Leo Coleman, Mona Bhan, and Jennifer Karlin; my New York University crew that keep my mind engaged, Elena Glasberg, Jennifer Cayer, Katherine Carlson, Jacqueline Reitzes, Jenni Quilter, Leah Souffrant, Ben Stewart, and Doug Dibbern. Special thanks to EWP colleague and poet Mara Jebson for wordsmithing my book title.

I am also greatly indebted to the lucid insights from my manuscript reviewers. I am immensely grateful for the hard work of the entire Cornell University team, Jim Lance, Clare Kirkpatrick Jones, and Brock Schnoke; and for the excellent scholarship and guidance of series editor, Dominic Boyer. I also thank Amron Gravett of Wild Clover Book Services for indexing.

I am deeply thankful for all my interlocuters in Italy who so generously shared their time and their stories with me.

My circle of friends in Italy has supported me in so many ways over the years, as kind and generous as they are fierce social analysts: Francesca Prevati and Riccardo Panzarini; Margherita Massignani and Alessandro Minin;

Grazia Morra; Sadi, Nader, and Shadia Marhaba; William Murphy and Giovanna Tomasi; Diego Vertieri, George and Sandy Basmaji; Giada Marini, and Ruggero and Patrizia Falconi. I am especially grateful to the late Barbara Falconi, to whom I owe an enormous debt, as she became my very first Italian friend when she was my “host mother” during my undergraduate semester abroad in Florence. She shared her world with me, a magnificent ocean of artists and musicians, sailors and mariners, misfits and outcasts. My journey toward cultural anthropology and to Italian studies was ignited in Barbara’s gift of inclusion, and her own awe-inspiring way of living against the grain.

My scholarly work is nourished by the incredible support of my partner, Lane Franklin Liston. And to our son, Lane Everheart Liston, thank you for coming along on our Italian adventures and for all the joy and love you’ve brought into my world.
