

Acknowledgments

I wrote this book in difficult times when we are witnessing a right-wing, nationalist, racist backlash that exacerbated the already difficult conditions of racialized, Indigenous, immigrant, and working-class populations across the globe. Over the course of my research and writing of this book, many of my interlocutors, friends, and acquaintances were incarcerated, had to leave Turkey, or worse, lost their lives to state security violence or the deadly attacks of the Islamic State. Despite this daunting political landscape, the courage, determination, and ethical aspirations of my interlocutors and friends from Istanbul's racialized and dissident working-class neighborhoods serve as a continuous source of inspiration, which made it possible for me to write this book. I owe an enormous debt of gratitude to those inspiring people who shared their lives and experiences with me and who admirably try to keep the spirit of solidarity and resistance alive under challenging conditions in extremely trying times.

This book started as a dissertation at Cornell University. At Cornell, I was very fortunate to be surrounded by scholars and an intellectual environment that profoundly shaped my intellectual formation. I would particularly like to thank to the members of my dissertation committee Steven Sangren, Shelley Feldman, Magnus Fiskesjo, and Vilma Santiago-Irizarry, for their engagement in my work and for their detailed and helpful comments on the earliest draft of this project.

I am grateful to Cornell University Press's Policing/World series editors Sameena Mulla, William Garriott, Ilana Feldman, and, especially, Kevin Karpiak, who believed in this book and who offered me invaluable suggestions that improved its content. The nuanced and detailed comments of two anonymous reviewers and two anonymous in-house editors were also very helpful during the revision process. The acquisition editor Jim Lance had been very encouraging from the beginning. I thank him for his support and encouragement. I am also grateful to the rest of the editorial team at Cornell University Press, including Clare Jones, for their meticulous work. The copyediting efforts of Gail Chalew and Mary Gendron are also much appreciated.

I am grateful to several individuals who read and commented on chapter drafts at various stages. Thank you to Brandy Doyle, Danayt Yosef, Delal Aydin, Deniz Cosan Eke, Dilek Kurban, Erol Saglam, Esra Sarioglu, Jean Comaroff, Martin Sökefeld, Orkide Izci, Talin Suciyan, Ümit Cetin, and Zetený Bartos. My warmest gratitude is also due to Theresa Truax-Gischler, whose keen editorial eye greatly improved the final version of this manuscript and whose always-refreshing support kept me writing and motivated.

Over the past several years, I have had the opportunity to present my research at numerous conferences, workshops, and seminars. These occasions helped me to sharpen my ideas and improve the main arguments of the book. I am grateful to those friends and colleagues who invited me to talk about various parts of this book at their universities, including Heike Drotbohm (Johannes Gutenberg University Mainz), Maaïke Voorhoeve (University of Amsterdam), Cristiana Strava (Leiden University), Caglar Dölek (Carleton University), Kader Konuk (University of Duisburg-Essen), Martin Sökefeld (Ludwig Maximilian University of Munich), Insa Koch (London School of Economics), Gökçe Yurdakul (Humboldt University), Ayşe Öncü (Sabanci University), Sevim Budak (İstanbul Üniversitesi), and Victor Collet (Université Paris Ouest Nanterre).

After my doctoral studies, I spent a semester at the European Institute at the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE). I am thankful to Esra Özyürek for encouraging me to apply for a fellowship for a visiting scholar position at the LSE and supporting my application. I would also like to thank Georges Khalili and Nora Lafi for hosting me at the Forum Transregionale Studien and the Leibniz-Zentrum Moderner Orient (ZMO) in Berlin as a postdoctoral fellow. These fellowships allowed me to concentrate full-time on research and writing and provided invaluable opportunities to discuss my project with scholars from across the disciplines. Warm thanks to fellows at the ZMO and Europe in the Middle East–The Middle East in Europe (EUME) Programme of the Forum Transregionale Studien for thought-provoking and stimulating discussions.

I am truly indebted to Martin Sökefeld for offering me an academic shelter in the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology at Ludwig Maximilian University of Munich during challenging times. I will never forget his camaraderie. Many thanks also to Kader Konuk for providing me another academic refuge at the Critical Residency Program at Free University, Berlin. Despite the pandemic, at the Center for Technology and Society at the Technische Universität Berlin, Gabriele Wendorf, Martina Schäfer, and Judith Vey created a collegial atmosphere, and for that I am thankful to them.

I took up a new position at Newcastle University after I finished writing this book. I would like to thank my new colleagues for their warm welcome. Thanks are also owed to Anna Secor, Ebru Soytemel, Sertac Sehlirkoglu, Murat Keyder, and Zeynep Kezer, who helped me begin my new academic journey.

Research, writing, and editing stages of this book were made possible by grants from the Wenner-Gren Foundation, Middle East Research Competition of the Ford Foundation, Cornell University's Graduate School and the Institute for European Studies, SALT Research, Türkiye Özgür Eğitim Kültür ve Sanat Vakfı (Free Education, Culture and Art Association of Turkey), Newton Fund of the British Council, Alexander Von Humboldt Foundation, the DAAD, and Einstein Foundation, Berlin. I am thankful for their support.

I would also like to thank Sebnem Korur Fincanci and Hurriyet Sener for allowing me to conduct archival research at the Human Rights Association of Turkey.

Portions of the following are previously published: chapters 2 and 3, in “Counterinsurgency in Istanbul: Provocative Counterorganization, Violent Interpellation and Sectarian Fears,” British Journal of Middle Eastern Studies; chapter 4, in “Urban Vigilantism: A study of Anti-terror Law, Politics, and Policing in Istanbul,” International Journal of Urban and Regional Research 42 (3): 408–22; and chapter 5, “Inspirational Hauntings and a Fearless Spirit of Resistance: Negotiating the Undercover Police Surveillance of Racialized Spaces in Istanbul,” Current Anthropology, 2022. I thank the publishers of these journals for permission to include these works in this book.

Being a working-class academic is not an easy task. For racialized and working-class academics, academia’s paths are filled with countless obstacles that are often invisible to others. My special gratitude goes to Yiğit Ekmekçi for helping me continue to try to find my way in those difficult paths.

Last but not least, my deepest thanks go to my partner Mehmet Rauf Kesici. This book would have been impossible without his calming spirit, radical optimism, endless care, and love. I thank him for believing in this book even at the times when I lost faith in it and for the life we share.
