

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book is the culmination of many years of research and thinking, and I am indebted to a great number of colleagues, teachers, and friends who have inspired me in ways large and small. I owe a special debt of gratitude to Michael W. Jennings, whose thoughts and commentary helped to shape the project in its formative stages, and whose seminars on Musil and Kracauer provided the germ cells for my approaches to their work. I would also like to acknowledge Klaus Mladek, Brigid Doherty, Jane O. Newman, and David Kleinberg-Levin, who imparted critical impulses at key junctures in my work on the book. My colleagues in the Department of German Studies at Dartmouth have given me essential support and guidance that have made this book possible. I feel fortunate to have found a home for the book at Cornell University Press, and Kizer S. Walker and Mahinder S. Kingra have been supportive, responsive, and a pleasure to work with. I would especially like to thank Paul Fleming, the Signale Editorial Board, and two anonymous reviewers for their feedback and suggestions, which have been pivotal in giving the book its final form.

My research for the book has been supported by the German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD), by a Charlotte Elizabeth Proctor Honorific Fellowship (Princeton University), and by the Office of the Dean of the Faculty at Dartmouth College. An earlier version of parts of chapter 2 was published as “Theology’s Weimar Moment: History before the Eschatological Limit,” in The Weimar Moment: Liberalism, Political Theology, and Law, ed. Leonard Kaplan and Rudy Koshar (Lanham, MD: Lexington Books, 2012), 267–87, and appears here with permission from Rowman & Littlefield. I would like to thank Allison Van Deventer for editing the manuscript and sharpening its prose. Above all, I am grateful to Petra McGillen, who has been an exceptional first reader and an unwavering source of support over the years.