

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The roots of this project started in fall 2003, when my mother signed me up for Russian 101 as an elective my freshman year at Wilton High. That eventually spiraled into choosing Lafayette College for its Russian and East European Studies program. My mom's collection of Soviet history books proved to be quite useful during my career, and I am particularly indebted to her marginalia. I must also thank my father and brother for their unwavering love and support during this whole process, especially for the many trips to and from JFK and LaGuardia at odd hours.

This book would not have been possible without several key people and institutions. At Carnegie Mellon, Wendy Goldman, Donna Harsch, Paul Eiss, and Steven Barnes were instrumental to this work. Kate Lynch and Scott Sandage provided key feedback on research seminar papers that later became the backbones of three chapters. Naum Kats provided insight for the commemoration chapter and donated hours of his time to help me translate an early version of it into Russian for presentation before the Russian Academy of Sciences and for publication. Scott Weingart, Daniel Evans, Jessica Otis, Jessica Benner, Matthew Lincoln, Emma Slayton, Ann Marie Mesco, Wilpen Gorr, Rikk Mulligan, and Casidhe Hutchison all helped with the digital mapping process. I appreciate the support and friendship of the students in the history program at Carnegie Mellon, especially my cohort of David Busch, Christine Grant, Mark Hauser, and Clayton Vaughn-Roberson. Jesse, Sue, Amy, Natalie, Andrew, and Lisa in the department office never failed to provide me assistance and always improved my mood. To the members of the CMU Sport Taekwondo Club, thank you for letting me reduce my stress on targets and your bodies, especially Jordan Tick, who had the unlucky role of being my sparring partner for five of my six years at Carnegie Mellon. Thank you to Brad Johnson, Franceska Xhakaj, Matteus Tanha, Milda Zizyte, Jennifer Golda, Susan Tanner, Maria Pia Gomez-Laich, and Natalie Suzelis for help and friendship outside my department. To Danielle, thank you for the fish fries.

My three years as the Digital History Postdoctoral Fellow at the University of Pittsburgh World History Center gave me additional time and resources to work on this manuscript. Thank you very much to Ruth Mostern, Molly Warsh, and Ali Straub during this time for support and feedback on materials. Jonathan Harris provided wonderful comments on earlier drafts that vastly improved the manuscript. My colleagues Aaron Sheehan-Dean and Sue Marchand at Louisiana State University also provided key feedback on this book. Vielen Dank to Günter Bischof for advice on this project as well.

I am grateful for the research support that I received from the Association of Slavic, East European, and Eurasian Studies and its Cohen-Tucker Dissertation Research Fellowship; the A. W. Mellon Foundation and its Digital Humanities Fellowship at Carnegie Mellon; the Central European History Society; the Department of History at Carnegie Mellon University; and the University of Pittsburgh World History Center; Center for Russian, East European, and Eurasian Studies; and European Studies Center for research and writing support for this project.

The staff of the Russian State University of the Humanities, especially Irina in the international department and history professor Aleksei Alekseevich Kilichenkov, helped immensely with my research process in Moscow. I wish to especially thank Tat'iana, Dar'ia, and Evgeniia at the Russian State Military Archive, who made sure that I always received my documents and intervened when necessary with the troublesome coat-check attendant. The staff at the State Archive of Contemporary History of the Ulyanovsk Region (GANI UO) also went above and beyond to help me with my research. The staff of Ulyanovsk State Technical University, or the "Politech," also continued to assist me in whatever ways possible. Without the continued friendship of history professor Vladimir Gurkin, I would not have a chapter examining the commemoration of German POWs. Marina Sergeevna patiently improved my Russian while I served as a Fulbright ETA at the Politech and introduced me to Ol'ga Tyurina, who facilitated my approval to work at GANI UO. Fate also intervened and helped me make the acquaintance of Gennadii Demochkin in the reading room of GANI UO; his personal archival collection gave me the missing information for the commemoration chapter that would otherwise have been akin to finding a needle in a haystack. Irina, Lena, George, Masha, Sasha, Kirill, Nikita, Katya G., Katya M., and Natasha in Ulyanovsk gave me places to stay, drove me around, fed me, and provided me with friendship over the years. Anne-Marie (Russia twin), Jean Louis, Alla, Terry, Gustave, Linda, and Jacob made sure that life in Moscow was never dull. Linda also helped me with some research in Berlin and Frankfurt an Oder.

I must thank my cohort of Soviet historians, all of whom studied at institutions other than Carnegie Mellon. Jonathon Dreeze, Erin Hutchinson, Kelsey Norris, Jack Seitz, Dakota Irvin, John Romero, Rebecca Hastings, Sean McDaniel, and Tyler Kirk all contributed in one way or another to survival abroad and the finished product. I will never be able to thank them enough for their research tips, drafting advice, and friendship. Erin and Tyler graciously agreed to read full drafts of the later-stage manuscript. I owe you both at the next ASEEEES.

Finally, I must thank the staff at Cornell University Press for their help with this process. Emily Andrew, David Silbey, and Bethany Wasik have been wonderful and encouraging editors. My two anonymous readers also provided a wealth of supportive and constructive feedback to make this the best possible project.

