Even though we've been friends for over a decade and have worked together on our podcast for years, we never considered writing a book together—until Michael McGandy, former editorial director of Three Hills, approached us with an idea. So this project would not have happened without him. And like all historians, we owe a lot to the archivists, experts, loved ones, and editors who brought this book to life. We're grateful for the labor and attention of our final editor, Mahinder Kingra, and acquisitions assistant India Miraglia at Three Hills, and for the formative feedback provided by the two reviewers; one of them remains unknown to us, but the other, Spencer McBride, has been enthusiastic and encouraging throughout this process. We couldn't have done any of this work without Ron Nagy at the Lily Dale Museum, as well as the folks in the front office and on the Lily Dale Assembly board of directors, who gave us access to the board meeting minutes, and the volunteers who gave us access to the special collections of the Marion Skidmore Library. We were also aided by a bevy of helpful folks: Elizabeth Graham and Jennifer

Mills, who graciously shared their research on Oskanonton, including providing us with some of his letters; Chautauqua County historian Michelle Henry; Jamestown Community College professor Traci Langworthy; Pomfret town historian Todd Langworthy; and Darwin R. Barker Library director Graham Tedesco-Blair about Lily Dale's connection to the temperance movement. We're especially thankful for all of our Patreon supporters, whose monthly and annual generosity funded research trips, book acquisitions, and a Zoom account, which allowed us to make group trips to Lily Dale, get texts we couldn't access through our various libraries, and of course meet, plan, and record podcast episodes over the years. And finally, we are nothing without the support and love of our families and friends.
